Minneapolis Harvester

And TWINE BINDER.

IMITATED BY MANY, EQUALLED BY NONE.

Manufactured by the Minneapolis Harvester Works,

Minneapolis, Minnesota.

MR. J. F. APPLEBY, the Inventor of the Appleby Twine Binder, is Superintendent of the Factory, and dictates the construction of every part of the machine. No other Binder has Appleby's Latest Improvements. No other Binder has the double automatic trip. Every lever is handy to the driver on the seat, even to raising and lowering the whole machine while in motion.—In short, the easiest handled, the lightest draft, the least gearing, the strongest built, the longest lasting, the most positive binding and latest improved machine yet built.

A full line of Extras will always be found at Sutton & Swan's Hardware Store, Tecumseh, Mich., also at the General Transfer House Toledo, Ohio.

All parties contemplating purchasing a Binder will do well to examine the Minneapolis before purchasing. A Sample Machine at the Old Livery Barn, on Railroad Street. For Sale by

AROUND THE COUNTY.

MACON CENTER.

Farmers are washing and shearing sheep without regard to the weather.

G. V. Osgood extracted sixty large oak stumps from an eight acre field between showers last week with his new stump machine.

J. Boyd has his new barn and granery nearly completed.

Robert Easlick has a new barn 32x46 up and enclosed.

Abe Harrington has moved into his new house on the Maynard farm.

France Yates had his barn yard gate stole not long since, and diligent search fails to find its whereabouts.

WEST TECUMSEH.

W. E. Smith has moved into his new house.

Bowen & Smith are building a bridge on the Sand Lake road, also E. Wilson one across Evans creek, near M. E. Conklin's.

A. Maugus has procured a honey extractor for the purpose of extracting honey from the comb, thus relieving the bees from making new comb. He has twenty swarms of bees on hand.

We mentioned last week the death of two of Mr. Carson's children by diphtheria. We are this week obliged to note the death of one more, a young girl of 12 years, who died last Thursday afternoon. Two more are slowly recovering from the same disease.

The subscribers of the new telegraph line meet to-night, Thursday, at Dr. House's office. All interested in the project are invited to meet at 8 o'clock.

RIDGEWAY.

Wash your sheep.
Mow your door yards.
Plant over your corn.

Last week Wednesday Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Waring had been married fifty years.

G. W. Jackson is painting his dwelling; others will soon follow suit.

Prof. H. C. Wilson has been engaged as superintendent of the Blissfield, west side, schools. Our neighbor village may safely congratulate herself.

It affords a great deal of satisfaction to know that the terrible holes in the turnpike are soon to be filled with gravel or muck. Which?

Mrs. Alfred Richards is spending a few weeks with friends here. Mr. Richard had completed a bargain for a farm two miles north on the ridge, but before the papers were drawn it all quashed.

Waring & Kniffin are replacing their stock of pine lumber and shingle which has been closed out so rapidly this spring.

Last Friday evening the church social was held at John VanVleet's, and it being the fifty-first birth-day of our minister the young people took advantage of the occasion and presented him with a genuine flexible bound bible valued at $12.50. Bro. Kilpatrick is a favorite of the young people.

The parsonage is receiving a thorough renovating and considerable repairing. It ought to be repaired with a new one, and it is to be hoped it will before many years.

C. A. Sharp having a great yearning for business has accepted a clerkship in Parker's store at the station. He will be much missed here as assistant P. M. What are we going to do now? It's a question asked many times a day. The quicker the question is solved the better.

When is that pipe organ coming? is the question often asked. It is definitely known now that it will be put up week after next, or about the 20th, so that the concert, for which preparation is now being made, can be given the Wednesday or Thursday evening following. The organ will be placed in the arch behind the pulpit, where it can be accommodated nicely without changing the rostrum.

Dr. D. W. Loree has dropped the gravel road project and is growing quite enthusiastic for a cheese factory. He has something like 100 cows pledged by farmers if the factory is located somewhere near the Kniffin mill. Ridgeway farmers can support such an addition to their facilities for money making, and the Dr. will probably succeed.

Last Friday morning, about 9 o'cl'k, the news reached the village that John Wilson, who lives on the county line near Thos. Lee's, had a horse stolen during the night. A dispatch was immediately sent from the village office to Sheriff Bidwell giving the information at hand and before noon the thief and horse were both in the hands of the sheriff at Britton. The young fellow arrested gave his name as Wm. Shelton. of Detroit, 393 Mich. Ave. The peculiar incident which led to his detection was a hand saw. He, somewhat intoxicated, boarded the evening train from Detroit at Romulus, gave the conductor 50 c. and said he would ride that out. At Cone's the conductor told him to show up again or get off the train. Being obliged to do the latter the train left the stranger on the track, with the saw in hand which he had when first seen. When Mr. Wilson reported the matter here yesterday morning he said no one saw the thief take the horse, but his sister who saw a man, about 2 o'clock at night with a hand-saw trying to ride a horse along the road in front of the house, but was thrown off several times, the horse apparently being afraid of the saw. The information soon reached the ears of parties here who saw the young chap with the saw on the train and remembered of his being put off at Cone's.—The horse evidently was not of the kind to be easily ridden off by a stranger, and when daylight came the horse was seen about six miles east of the place loose in the road where it had been abandoned. No trace was found of the thief until about 11:30 when he suddenly put in an appearance at Britton and asked the agent the way to Detroit, proposing to get out forthwith.

The dispatch having been sent via. Britton, describing the tramp, W. J. Clark, the agent, recognized at once, by the help of the hand-saw which the fellow still clung to, that ye wicked sinner was the horse thief and telegraphed the same to the village just in time to notify Sheriff Bidwell, who arrived a few minutes later. Horse and thief both captured within three hours after notice was given. Hurrah for our local telegraph line.

SPRINGVILLE.

John Hand has got nicely started in his brick and tile yard and is manufacturing about 1000 brick daily.

The ice cream festival to be given by the Sons of Temperance was deferred on account of rain until Saturday evening, January 10th. Arrangements have been made with A. G. Evans, of Brooklyn, for ice cream and strawberries. A good literary may be expected, while music will be furnished by the Springville Cornet Band.—Proceeds to go for payment on new organ. Everybody invited.

On Monday last a stranger, who refused to give his name on the ground of his belonging to a respectable family, was halted at the Silver Creek House, in Woodstock, and brought back to Cambridge before Justice Queal, to answer to the charge of stealing a watch and chain from a man near Clinton. He plead guilty, and after delivering up the property to the owner and being deaf, dumb, consumptive and of very innocent appearance, was discharged.

Springville will not be as well represented at the State Band Tournament, at Jackson, as was expected.

Should think a band contest at the Farmers' Picnic, (as spoken of by a correspondent of the Adrian Times,) would be an interesting feature, and would prove to the advantage of the association.

Shall we have a celebration on the Fourth?

ROME.

Mr. Stoddard has improved the exterior appearance of his house by a sufficient quantity of paint. Mr. Rexford ditto.

T. Seger has purchased from Geo. Fleming the lot joining his mother's on the east, and will erect a dwelling in the near future.

Several of our citizens went to the Toledo races last west and report them good notwithstanding the rain.

Hi. Rivenburgh is building a paper boat which creates a deal of wonder and amaze and consequent talk. It is a fine looker.

The funeral of Mrs. Dodge took place on last Sunday at the Baptist church west of the center. She was one of the first settlers of this place and much respected and liked by all who knew her. Her age was eighty last January.

No corn cultivated as yet and very little up.

Wheat, grass and oats are getting an immense growth.

CLINTON.

Rev. J. W. Payne was absent Wednesday attending the county baptist association at Fairfield.

Rev. J. W. Henry lectures at the Baptist church on Friday and Saturday evenings. Subject, "South Sea Islands.

Dr. Strong returned and made a call upon his Clinton friends, spending last Sunday here.

Mrs. D. H. Silvers, of Manchester, spent Sabbath in Clinton.

E. G. Cook is absent on a visit to Kansas where he has a farm and stock that require looking after.

David Woodward showed us some peach limbs having an abundance of fruit thereon, One twig of six inches contained sixteen peaches about as large as a good sized pea. "Dave" offers $25 to the man that will pick the young fruit to thin them out, and another $25 for picking the natural fruit. That don't look as though we were to have no peaches, notwithstanding the late frosts.

"Welk" Fisk has been kalsoming, papering, and otherwise improving his homestead, and will be ready after a little rest to receive visitors and show the model house of Chicago street.

J. S. Kies has just completed one of the finest barns in Clinton, with a pig sty and a perfect gem of a chicken coop attached thereto. Joseph certainly has an eye for the beautiful while planning for convenience.

The Baptist society held a social at Mr. Watson's, in Bridgewater, Tuesday. There was a large gathering, thirty-two horses, mostly attached to single vevicles, having been brought into service to convey the concourse, to say nothing of the neighbor pedestrians.

The ladies of the M. E. church gave a lawn fete and ice cream festival at McClure and Sherwood's lawn last evening. There was a large gathering, and all seemed to enjoy themselves hugely. The cream for the occasion was furnished by Charley Spafford, and was pronounced by all splendid.

Miss Julia Scifert and Anna Hialey, of Tecumseh, were the guests of Miss Cristine Burton Saturday and Sunday last.

Miss Louise Hialey was the guest of Miss Ella Bartlett over Sabbath.

Miss Jessie Spafford spent Sunday last with Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Spafford.

The Board have taken advantage of the vacation and are having the school grounds graded and otherwise beautified.

The graduating exercises were good from commencement to the close, and would have been very much enjoyed had it not been for the fact that even standing room was at a premium.—The singing was excellent. How could it be otherwise with ye editor of the News as chorister.

Episcopal social at the residence of S. B. Rose on Tuesday evening. A good turn-out, and all seemed to enjoy the occasion.

John Miller and David Woodward, two of our live business men, are talking very strongly of moving their respective business, (dry goods and foundry,) to Manchester.

Invalids should prevent their disease from gaining ground by using Brown's Iron Bitters. It stops decay, keeps the blood warm, and gives the emaciated form a new lease of life.

Mr. James B. Bailey, of Syracuse, N. Y., writes: "Of all men born to suffer, I think I have had my fullest share; from my fourteenth year I have been a miserable invalid. When twenty-six years of age, I felt I was sixty. My troubles made me unfit for business or pleasure. A year ago I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, and now in my twenty-seventh year I feel myself for once in my life, "A perfect man."

Detroit Evening News: The Tecumseh HERALD is 32 years old, and is emphatically one of the best edited and handsomest weeklies published in the state.

An Editor's Opinion.

An editorial friend of ours, who has grown enthusiastic over a certain remedy which has cured him of dyspepsia, general debility, and nervousness, writes an editorial as follows: "We believe that Brown's Iron Bitters are destined to be THE medicine of the world. They give real health and strength to every part of the body, restore every lost or impaired organic function, and give new life and new vigor to every physical and mental faculty. Every man and woman in ill-health should rejoice that a real cure lies in Brown's Iron Bitters.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The special meeting of the Farmers' Social Club will be held at Sand Lake Thursday, June 22th. The lady members will please remember to provide plenty of refreshments, as it will be a picnic dinner and supper. Remember to glean the strawberry beds.

"THE CHILDREN LAUGHED AND SANG."

It was in the chill December
That the Angel of Death came by,
And he rustled his wings of darkness
As he swept the wintry sky;
A household of happy creatures
Dwelt quiet and free from care,
And the angel stole in softly,
And stood all silent there.
Never a fear nor a pang had they.)

And the angel swiftly in silence
Struck home the mortal blow,
And in the wintry morning
He laid the father low;
And wildly the sorrowful mother,
Bewildered and stunned with woe,
Wailed to her lone bereavement,
And wished that she too might go!
(But the children laughed and sang at their play,
Never a fear nor a pang had they.)

Cold in the lonely chamber
Lay the father's form at rest,
And they laid the delicate flower-wreaths
Upon his silent breast;
And forth from his home they bore him,
And hid from sound and sight,
And then heaped the cold earth above him
While the children's feet trod light.
(But the boys went home to their happy play;
Never a fear nor a pang had they.)

And often the childish footsteps
Are turned to their father's grave,
When the grass, with its glistening hoar-frost,
Lies over the heart so brave;
And sometimes they watch their mother
Bending in sorrow and pain;
And they say in their childish voices:
"Will papa never come again?"
(But soon they will laugh and sing at their play; Never a fear nor a pang have they.)

AN EXCITING RIDE.

When blasting was discontinued at the Wistar mine on the Zintop Mountain, Idaho, the writer was for the time left in charge of the mill, containing the engine, stamps, battery, etc. With the exception of Print Eberson, the "powder-boy," all the other workmen were discharged.

Print remained to keep me company. The foreman and chemist in charge of the amalgamating process also left. But it was necessary that some one should stay to guard the property until it should be removed; and as I had been engineer, I was asked to do so through the winter.

This was in November, 1874. The open sheds and bunkers of the mill were boarded up, and everything made as snug as possible, to keep out the rain and snow. Thus it happened that Print and I lived there week after week, keeping a sort of "bachelor's hall."

That is to say we done our own cooking over a small stove in the mill, and boarded ourselves. Having plenty of time, we watched for deer occasionally in the ravines and along the mountain-sides to the north of the ridge, where the mine was located; and Print began trapping martens, the sharp squeaks of which we now heard early every morning around the mill.

As powder-boy, it had been Print's business to carry the cans of powder and nitro glycerine in and out of the "drift." The latter explosive was purchased and received there, made up in cartridges, put in long tin cases, containing each a safety fuse and a small charge of gunpowder for firing the mightier rock-render.

From the mine down to the stage-house, or station, the distance was five miles, over a bare stony slope, in some places somewhat steep, in others nearly level, and too barren for trees and bushes. Nothing, in fact, grew on it save tufts of wire-grass.

The station building with its sheds was in plain sight, seemingly far below us. The mine was said to be thirteen hundred feet above Nimm's Creek, along which the stage road runs. We were in the habit of going to the station every second or third day after such supplies as we needed.

With a glass however, objects at the station and along the road could be plainly observed. In our idle moments we used to sit and watch the teams a coming and going.

Snow fell at times during November and December, and on the 3d or 4th of January there came a prodigious storm. For thirty-six hours the wind blew terrifically, and the whirling clouds of fine snow flew in at every crack and chink of the mill.

The only place into which it did not drift was the engine-room, and into this we moved our stove; but even here had no easy task to keep warm. Luckily, we had dry pine wood enough left from the fuel for the engine, else we should assuredly have frozen to death.

The gale did not fairly abate till the third day, when the whole country looked white and wintry indeed. Not less than four feet of snow had come. Down in the valley there seemed to be even more of it than on the mountain.

The station and its sheds looked as though they were nearly buried. A great many teams had put in there for shelter, and we could see a number of snow-laden wagons standing outside, for which there was no room in the sheds. The teamsters were shoveling paths for taking the mules down to the creek to water.

Meantime, the stock of provisions which we had brought up on our backs five days before, was exhausted; we had only a dozen frozen potatoes left in the mill.

Some snow-shoes were hastily rigged from strips of thin cottonwood boards with bands of leather nailed on for the straps, with bands of leather nailed on for the straps, and we were about setting off to go down to the station, when Print, who had been outside the mill, came excitedly back, exclaiming.—

"The redskins have come down on the stage-house! There's an awful battle! I can hear the guns goin' pop—pop—pop!"

I seized the glass and ran out of the mill. Plainly enough I could hear the distant crack of rifles, and even see a faint blue wreath of powder-smoke hanging over the station. With the glass I counted seventeen or eighteen Indians, who could be seen dodging about the bluffs on the opposite side of the creek on snow-shoes.

We had heard a rumor of hostile Indians several weeks before, when "Gray Eagle's band was said to be on a marauding expedition. Such reports, in fact, are always going at frontier settlements. The plunder of so many teams, snow-bound there at the stage-house, was probably the object the savages had in view.

For us this, of course was a most alarming matter. We knew not how soon the redskins might see our smoke and come up to the mine. There was nothing to prevent their seeing it; indeed, we had no doubt they had seen it all the morning.

Setting Print to watch their movements, I fell to work and barricaded the entrances to the mill as effectively as possible, with logs and uncrushed lumps of ore.

In the course of an hour, Print called out that the Indians had drawn off from the station and gone up to the timber, at the "bend" of the creek. Here they camped.

The teamsters and Hawkins at the station had given them so hot a reception that they had given up the attack, it seemed, but had camped near by, to be on the lookout for the teams. We could see their smoke. The bend was nearly a mile nearer the mine than the stage-house. The creek there bent back to the northwest; while the stage-house lay down a little south of east from the mine.

We had proof, only a little after noon, that the savages knew of our being at the mine. I was cleaning out one of two old carbines, when Print rushed in, saying that three Indians were coming up the mountain.

These were, however, merely scouts, who had come out to reconnoitre us. They walked entirely round the the crest of the ledges where the mine was located, but kept at a respectful distance. I sent two balls whistling past their heads, to let them know we were ready for them; and Print had a nitro-glycerine cartridge ready to sling at them, if they ventured near. After peeping at the mills from all sides, they went away.

Meantime, the sky had darkened again. The weather was moderating, and by four o'clock rain was falling. We made a very thin soup of the shakings, of a meal-bag, and boiled and ate a few of our frozen potatoes; not very nourishing fare. I kept watch through the night, but let Print sleep a part of the time.

About midnight the sky cleared and the air became colder, with the wind from the north. By sunrise it was freezing sharply. The whole slope to the east and far onward over the bare peaks, beyond the creek, shone like ice.

A sharp crust had formed over the deep snow, not hard or thick enough to bear up a man, though a cayote might have run on it. There was no stirring out from the station; and the Indians were still up at their camp in the timber, as we saw by their smoke.

By this time we were both getting hungry enough. We were actually suffering for want of food, and should the savages remain there long we should be starved out. Had the nights been dark, I should have been hopeful of reaching the station under cover of the darkness; but there was a nearly full moon at the time, which on that snow-crust would render all objects plainly visible.

The savages were beyond doubt keeping a close watch, and would be almost certain to cut us off. The rascals would have less than three-fourths of a mile to run to out tour. Yet in the famishing condition in which we were, and growing hungrier every hour, I had about concluded that we must both risk endeavoring to get to the stage-house, when Print suggested sliding down to the station on a hand-sled.

"But where's your hand-sled?" I asked.

"I can make one he said. "It will be a fearfully long slide, but I believe we can do it."

"Well, but won't the redskins head us off all the same?" said I.

"They'll have hard work to do it, when once we get a-goin!" cried Print so confidently that I begun to enter into his scheme.

Print, in fact, was from one of the Eastern states, where the boys are used to coasting. For myself, it was a matter I knew next to nothing of, snow being a rarity, indeed, in my native state of Lousiana.

So Print set to work to make a hand-sled—after a plan of his own. The "runners," as he called them, were fashioned from two wide pieces of ash plank, shaved off to a point at the front ends. While he was chamfering these, he bade me take off two hoops of broad sheet-iron from an empty tierce that stood in the store-room.

The hoops he straightened, smoothed and nailed to the bottoms of his runners, for shoes. So broad were the pieces of plank that the runners stood nearly a foot high; and they were coupled together with four or five stout ash cross-pieces, or bars,

A wide bit of board was nailed top of these to sit on; and this, with two or three cleats to hold on by, completed the vehicle. It was eight feet long by two and a half feet wide.

I advised putting up side-pieces to hold us on; but Print said no, we must cling by the cleats. He explained that he had made it longer than ordinary coasting sleds, in order that it might be sure not to cut into the snow-crust. In short, Print seemed to understand the business so well that I had merely to keep quiet and let him go ahead his own way.

I should say he was from three to four hours, making his sled, with what aid I could give him; and the moment it was done he was for starting off. My own faith was not so strong as was his, and for some minutes I hesitated.

"Get on!" exclaimed Print. "We'll be there in ten minutes, or less time."

The sun was sinking low; but the whole broad, snowy slope shone and glistened like glass. From the north a cold wind blew in long, heavy gusts. It seemed a fearful ride and a fearful risk. I went back to get one of the carbines.

"Better leave it," Print said. "You'll have all you can do to hold on, without shutin! Get pretty well forward and hang to them cleats like a sheep-tick. I'll ride behind and steer her down."

He pushed the sled along to the verge of the slope—and an instant later, we were gliding down the first of the steep inclines.

Faster—faster—faster!

How the cold wind cut our faces. The tears flew into my eyes. Jump—jump—jump we went, over hummocks and hollows.

Then came a wide level stretch across which the sled darted like a shuttle, bouncing from knoll to knoll; and ere I had hardly time to catch my breath, we were shooting down another steep ridge-side, fairly throwing up a spray from the icy snow-crust.

"Hold fast!" Print yelled; and next instant we were ricochetting over a frightfully rough place, where the snow scarcely filled the hollows betwixt the rocks. Bound—thump—grind! and we were capsized and went headlong.

But Print was up again in a moment—dragging the sled along to the crest of another steep descent. Save for a few bruises, we were uninjured.

Already we were half way down to the station, with no Indians in sight. But we had hardly shoved off when a distant yell came to our ears, from up towards the timber-belt.

But before we had got well going, we saw three—four—FIVE redskins skimming along the crust on their raquettes, far down in the valley below—to cut us off.

'Twas too late to recede, even if we had decided to do so. Forward was the only chance for us—and the faster the better. "Hang hard!" Print exclaimed. "I don't believe they can hit us!"

The sled gathered headway and shot down the long, glittering incline, Print keeping it headed straight for the station with an occasional jab of his heel. But those redskins were skating along on their raquettes as fast as a man could run; and they had but a comparatively short distance to go.

One was some distance in advance of the other four. I saw he had a gun. He intended to get very near us before we passed. I honestly think we were going a mile a minute. I could scarcely draw breath. The Indians raised a yell and rushed forward

We were close on them now. The forward one stopped. I saw him cocking his gun—to let us have it when we dashed past. But he didn't get the chance for that. "Hang!" Print shouted to me, and gave a hard kick to the right, sending the sled straight on to the savage.

It was all done in a second of time, and my eyes were nearly blinded with the icy spray but I felt a shock and indistinctly saw that Indian going heels over head—over and over.

Bang—bang—bang! went three or four guns at close quarters, but fortunately they all missed us

Next moment we dashed up a big drift clean over the roof of one of the stage-sheds—struck whack in the crust of the other side, bounded on twice or three times more, and brought up down in the bed of the creek.

The teamsters gave a "hurrah," and running out picked us up and helped us in.

We saw the redskin we had run down crawling slowly away and presently the others carried him off to their camp.

We were blockaded there at the stage-house for over a fortnight, before a thaw came, when a company of cavalry arrived from the fort below, and cleared the road of Indians.—Youth's Companion.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

Harvest Soup.—Cut in small pieces one pound of good beef, cover with cold water and boil gently for three hours; let it stand over night; remove all the fat; bring to a boil and add a can of lobster, cut fine; prepare one cauliflower sliced, cut the corn from one dozen ears, break in small pieces one quart of butter-beans, slice one onion, cut fine three or four radishes, add all to the soup, with one whole green bull-pepper, one teaspoonful black pepper, one teaspoonful salt; in one hour add one quart of tomatoes sliced; when tender, carefully remove without breaking on the skimmer the bull pepper; simmer the rest four hours longer; add no more water before the tomatoes are put in than necessary to keep from burning; after they are in none will be needed. Half the above quantities can be used. Some like potato with the other vegetables. Add salt to taste before dishing. A little rice can be used, if liked, in the soup.

Chicken with Okra. Singe and draw a large, tender chicken, cut in small pieces, put in a saucepan with two ounces of butter, two ounces of lean ham, and an onion cut in squares; stir on the fire until the moisture is evaporated, drain the butter off, wet with two quarts of beef broth, add a quart of peeled and seedless tomatoes (cut in small pieces,) half a green pepper, (cut small,) four ounces of rice, and about 50 tender okras, (pared at both ends and cut in rounds;) season with salt, pepper, nutmeg, a bunch of parsley with aromats, also a leek, and celery, pour it into a soup-tureen and serve.

Muffins.—One quart sifted flour, two eggs one tablespoonful melted butter, one tablespoonful sugar, one teaspoonful salt, (not heaped,) quarter yeast-cake dissolved in a little water; mix with sufficient sweet milk to make a medium stiff batter; beat the eggs very light, stir all together, set to rise over night, add one small teaspoonful soda just before baking; bake in gem-pans on top of stove to set the bottom, finish in quick oven; not to be turned over.

Quickly-Made Beef Tea.—Take any desired quantity of steak from the top part of the round, as this has less fat and more juice than any other part; remove all the fat and divide the meat into small pieces, cutting across the grain; put the meat in a dry saucepan and allow it to sweat for five minutes over a slow fire, stirring occasionally to prevent sticking. After sweating for five minutes, you will find the meat white in color, and surrounded by a rich, nourishing gravy, which, in case of great exhaustion, may be given in this form. But ordinarily we next pour over the meat its weight in cold water, allowing a pint of water to a pound of beef. Stir until the water boils; it must not boil again, but simmer gently for five or ten minutes until the sauce is drawn out, then strain carefully into a bowl, and if there is a particle of fat on the top, remove it with a piece of brown, unsized paper. By this method you may take off every star of fat without wasting any of the beef tea, as is done when using a ladle or spoon. Salt according to taste, but always lightly.

Horse-Radish Vinegar (English.)—Quarter of a pound of scraped horse-radish, one ounce minced chalot, one drachm cayenne, one quart vinegar, put all in a bottle, shake well every day for two weeks; when thoroughly steeped, strain and bottle, and it is ready for use. This is made best in September or October, as horse-radish is best then, and it is a nice relish for meat.

Fire-Proof Dwellings.

In view of the many destructive fires amongst domestic dwellings, we wonder that the use of light iron joists and fire-proof floors is not more extensive than at present. Half the danger and destruction resulting from a fire in some domestic dwelling would be avoided by the use of such. It is generally the case that fires are first discovered when localized by a single room, and it is only the rapid destruction of the whole of the interior of a dwelling house and often serious loss of life which we at present take as a matter of course. We think that in a few years to come the entire destruction of a dwelling because one room has caught fire will be thought as outrageous as the destruction of a row of houses from a conflagration in one would be at present. A fire may very easily be starved out by want of combustible material, a great deal easier than it can be extinguished by water when wood or other combustible material has once caught. In the localization of a fire in the room in which it occurred would lie best protection to life and property against fire. It is not as if such protective means need require excessive outlay. A floor of iron joists and non-inflamable material can be laid, we believe, almost as cheap as the present wooden floors. To complete the isolation of each room the doors may be made, at no increase of present cost of wood, so impregnated with chemicals that it is no longer inflammable. These improvements will surely come in time; like all others, they may be foretold long before the public eventually receives the benefit of them.

Consumption.

A REMEDY SUGGESTED BY A MINNESOTA PHYSICIAN.

In a letter from Minneapolis, Minn., to the Chicago Tribune, in which he declares that no cough mixture can reach the lungs, Dr. D Unger says:

I need not describe the symptoms of consumption, as they are so well known and frequently beheld that even the most unintelligent can diagnose the disease from the hectic spots in the cheeks, the terrible exhausting cough, the purulent expectoration, and wasting body; nor will I here put down the thousand and one opinions already printed as to its causation. It will be enough to say that, when it is once seated, strenuous efforts to check its progress must be made. Nature herself always tries to do this, and with slight aid, she usually succeeds. Be hopeful, then, ye afflicted ones.

Let us compare life to a burning lamp. If we supply oil as rapidly as the flame consumes it, the wick remains unburnt, and the lamp throws out its given light; but if we fail to supply the oil needed to produce the flame, it is a foregone conclusion; the wick becomes consumed, the light grows dim, flickers, and finally goes out altogether. In other words, the light dies because there is too much oxygen and not enough carbon. So it is with a consumptive's life. The disease he suffers from is a wasting one, an internal fever which consumes the carbon in his blood more rapidly than the food he eats can supply it. If carbon was furnished as fast as the disease exhausted it, the body would not waste; if it was put into the blood in excess of what the disease required, there would be an increase in the strength and bulk of the body, instead of a decrease. Like the lamp, the supply of oil in the body must be equivalent to the demand or in excess of it. If this be not so, the life, like the wick, will be consumed.

Some months ago the little daughter (aged fourteen) of a trunk-maker in this city, one Mr. Garden—I am permitted to use his name—was pronounced a hopeless consumptive; and to have seen her at that time one would have supposed there was good ground for the decision, as she was a mere skeleton, had a terrible cough, expectorated over half a pint a day of greenish, blood-streaked tuberculous matter, and was so exceedingly nervous that she could scarcely sleep at all, night or day. She had been doctored a long time with cough and consumption specifies, and one or two physicians had tried their skill on her, but without avail, her life gradually drawing to its close. Meeting her father—who was almost heart-broken at the thought of soon losing her—one day, I gave him this prescription:

One half pound finely cut up beef steak (fresh.)
One drachm pulverized charcoal.
Four ounces pulverized sugar.
Four ounces rye whisky.
One pint boiling water.

Mix all together, let it stand in a cool place over night, and give from one to two teaspoonfuls liquid and meat—before each meal.

This was tried, and in four or five weeks this little girl was so rosy and healthy, free from all cough and other symptoms of disease, that it was considered almost a miracle in the neighborhood in which she lived.

What caused this great change? Simply the supplying of her system with more carbon than the disease could exhaust, thereby giving nature the upper hand in the conflict.

I have used this preparation very frequently, and have never found it to act otherwise than beneficially. The dose should be small at first, until the stomach becomes used to it, and then gradually increased.

Let all consumptives try it who read this, weighing themselves before they commence, and again after they have taken it for a week or ten days. To their astonishment they will discover that, instead of their wasting away, they will gain in strength and flesh.

STONES IN THE KIDNEYS

And Bladder Expelled—Long Suffering of one of Troy's Best People—A Lucky Man.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone, from the bladder, of an oval shape, 5-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly,

James Andrews.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Women and Wine.

Of the worst foes that women have ever had to contend with, wine stands at the head. The appetite for strong drink in men has spoiled the lives of more women—ruined more hopes for them, scattered more fortunes for them, brought to them more shame, sorrow and hardship—than any other evil that lives. The country numbers tens of thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands—of women who are widows to-day, and sit in hopeless weeds, because their husbands have been slain by strong drink.

"Yes," says the Agricultural World, there are hundreds of thousands of homes scattered all over the land, in which women live lives of torture, going through all changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those they love, love wine better than they do the woman they have sworn to love. There are women by the thousands who dread to hear at the door the step that once thrilled them with pleasure; that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in any statement made in regard to this matter, because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows of a wife with a drunken husband, or a mother with a drunken son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached, in this world at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow, the sense of disgrace for herself and her children, the poverty—and not unfrequently the beggary—the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering, life-long struggle and despair of countless women with drunken husbands, are enough to make all women curse wine, and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex."

Glycerine.

The name is derived from a Greek word signifying "sweet," and has reference to taste. As oil consists of acids and glycerine, the latter is obtained by separating the oil—the same is true of fat—into its component parts.

The uses of glycerine are becoming more and more extended and valuable. There is no application that is better than a few drops rubbed daily over the hands, to keep them moist and smooth. The hands should be first moistened with water, as the glycerine otherwise absorbs moisture from the skin.

Glycerine and carbolic acid—three ounces of the former to fifteen grains of the latter—are among the most effective applications for chapped hands, and equally for a scurfy skin. It may be used two or three times a day.

Glycerine is is also said to be exceedingly effective in some cases of piles. A gentleman who had suffered from them for years, and whose case appeared to defy medical treatment, was cured by taking it daily with his food. A dose would be from a half to a whole tablespoonful.

Writers in the London Lancet strongly recommend it for acidity of stomach. Its use for this trouble was first discovered by a private gentleman, who had long been a sufferer from it. Having read in the paper that glycerine kept milk from souring, he said to himself, "Why won't it keep me?"

He tried it with complete success, and was able thenceforth to take food from which he had been forced to abstain. It was subsequently employed by physicians with like results.

It does not remove acidity; it only prevents its occurrence. Take from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful immediately after eating; or take it in the tea in place of sugar.

The Baltimore American gives ladies a hint for the paralysis of "mashers:"

The lady has only to cast her eyes modestly down and fix her gaze intently on the feet of the masher. The glance at the feet should be concentrated, yet full of pity, and should linger slightly as the lady passes by. Instantly the whole platoon of mashers is affected by a profound distrust. The sympathetic look strikes terror to their souls. They all cast down their eyes, and look at their own feet. The horrible fear that their shoes are not in the latest style takes possession of their bosoms. Each one is shaken with the conviction that his foot is abnormally spacious; he becomes conscious of multitudinous protruding corns and bunions; his shoes, peradventure, are muddy or dusty; or something has gone wrong with the set of his trousers at the ankle. The stoutest lah-de-dah collapses at the mere possibility of such a thing—his nerve is gone. The eyeglass falls from his eye, his arms lose their kimbo; he feels that his pantaloons are cupped at the knees, and that his coat is full of misfits and wrinkles; he suspects the cleanliness of his stockings, shudders at the thought that the sole and upper leather have parted company, revealing that painful fact. He even flies to some secluded spot and makes a protracted investigation before he can satisfy himself that all is right. And even then his nerves do not recover their tone. He is liable to be again panic-stricken. A glance of pity mingled with a slight smile cast at his feet will renew and aggravate all his paralytic symptoms.

The masher, the lad-de-dah and lum-tum, like all other creatures, have their weak spots. To prevent a hog from rooting, slit his nose; to keep a jackass from braying, weight down his tail; to keep a masher from mashing, gaze sadly at his feet!

THE LAPLANDER.—The Laplander's sledge has no runners, but, like himself, it is covered with reindeer skin, and is in shape something like a canoe. Harnessed to this sledge, the reindeer starts off with almost the rapidity of the steam-engine.

The reindeer is not only the Laplander's horse, but his cow, and, during the time that it gives milk, he is freezing large quantities of it, to be used when no more is to be obtained. Then he breaks off a piece, thaws it out, and has again a good article of milk.

The deer is also his food, large herds of them being kept in some parts of the country. From its skin the Laplander makes the roof and floor of his house, his bed, his shoes and stockings, his clothes, and cords and strings for his bow. Without this animal the Laplander would be in a deplorable condition.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

On the recommendation of the state military board the company organized at Grand Rapids, known as the "Custer Guard," has been accepted as a company of state troops, and will be mustered into the service.

That's a Fact.

A man can't work unless he feels well. The hard times have made plenty of people sick simply by worrying them almost out of their wits about money and business. Trouble of mind has brought on trouble of body. There is indigestion, heaviness in the head, and all that. Are you afflicted in this way? Go and invest One Dollar for a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," and it will make a new man of you. It takes the bile out of the blood, and is worth a trip to Rondout, N. Y.,—the Doctor's home—on foot, if you cannot get it more easily. First however, see if your Druggist hasn't got it.

A barn fire in Pontiac one day last week served admirably to show how poor a water supply that city has to depend upon in an emergency. The barn was within 50 rods of the main street, y it was impossible to get water to it. The affair revives the water works question.

The Doctor's Last Happy Resort.

I recently had a very difficult case of Consumption. I treated it in the most scientific manner possible, but to no effect; patient grew gradually worse. Rather than give up, and as a last resort, I decided, much against my wish, to use a remedy that had cured one of my former patients.—Greatly to my surprise, the patient began to gain, and in a much shorter time than I dared to ever expect, she was completely cured. The name of this remarkable remedy is Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. I now use it altogether in my practice.—Leading M. D., Evansville.

David Benedict, a Gladwin county woodsman, was in East Saginaw recently and got full of Saginaw whisky. Being unaccustomed to it, of course it made him crazy at once, and he wandered back towards Gladwin and got lost in the woods. Thirteen days later he was found and given food and care. He was thinner than a grey-hound when he got out of the woods.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

Bishop Foss, of Minneapolis, continues to gain strength, and there are strong hopes that he will not be permanently crippled.

Davitt and Dillon will sail for New York next Thursday. The Irish residents of Liverpool are arranging a demonstration in their honor.

At Tree Notch, Ala., three children of Alexander Adams were burned to death by the explosion of a kerosene can.

The crop reports are of a very encouraging nature. The wheat prospect all over the country may be classed as brilliant, the cold, wet weather having retarded the development of the chinch-bug. Corn will be late, but there is ample time for it to mature, and the acreage has very largely expanded.

The will of Moses Taylor, of New York, whose estate has been carefully appraised at $25,000,000, was offered for probate Wednesday. To his wife he left all his personal property and a net income of $100,000 per annum. The executors are directed to divide the remainder equally between five children.

Frank Leonard, a fireman in New York, mounted a rotten ladder, Monday, and rescued three persons from a burning tenement-house in Suffolk street. He made them leap six feet from a window into his arms, as he stood upon the shaky support, and passed them safely down to others.

General Leake, district attorney at Chicago, has gone to Washington to obtain information as to what is wanted of Doyle, the counterfeiter. Brockway was taken to the capital by a deputy of the district attorney's office in New York, and Smythe is about to be brought before the treasury officials. The correspondents are sorely puzzled as to what is going on.

There is widespread indignation in Virginia over the proposal to remove the ashes of Thomas Jefferson to a cemetery in Washington, and legal steps have been taken in opposition to the project. It is claimed that Mrs. Meikelham, the sole surviving grandchild, has no right to give her assent to the transfer, as her name was not mentioned in the will.

Mary T. Rowland, president of the Parnell Branch Ladies' Land League of Cleveland, has written an open letter to Bishop Gilmour, stating that the league will not alter in or deviate from the course marked out, and that if this be un-Catholic then they are proud to be called heretics. The Catholic leaguers of Buffalo express great indignation over the policy of Bishop Gilmour, and have passed denunciatory resolutions.

Five additional British war vessels reached Alexandria Wednesday, and France has forwarded more iron-clads. The porte does not favor sending a squadron so long as the allied fleet remains. Representatives of all the powers urged the sultan of Turkey to declare in favor of the khedive, and summon to Constantinople the leaders of the revolt.

General Fuero, with a force of 400 Mexican cavalry, followed Ju and his force of renegade Apaches of three weeks, and surprised them near Bosquade Santiago at daybreak on May 25. Thirty-seven bucks were killed, and ten captured and shot. The Mexicans had one officer and eight soldiers killed, and two officers and twelve men wounded. Fuero secured fifty head of stock and the entire camp outfit of the savages.

One of the jurymen in the Malley murder trial is 74 years of age, and of late he has been unable to keep awake in his seat. Now he is prostrated by erysipelas in the head, and the case has been postponed to June 13, with a good prospect that the whole testimony will have to be repeated before a new juror. The Malleys declare that they will be satisfied with nothing short of acquittal.

The body of Miss Zoe Watkins, who disappeared so mysteriously at St. Louis, was found in the river at Carondelet and fully identified by her uncle. A thorough investigation showed that no violent act had been committed against her, and that her money and jewelry were untouched, and the conclusion was reached that in an aberrated condition of mind she had committed suicide. Her sorrowing father could not muster courage to look upon her bloated corpse.

It will be remembered that George Ellis, one of the murderers of the Gibbons family at Ashland, Ky., was on Friday sentenced to imprisonment for life. At the time of the terrible tragedy, last December, the people were with great difficulty restrained from taking swift vengeance on the butchers. The escape of Ellis from the gallows was too much to be endured. A party of thirty masked men impressed a train into their service, at 2 o'clock Saturday morning, to proceed from Ashland to Catlettsburg. At the latter place they took Ellis from jail and carried him back with them to the scene of the murder, and hanged him to a sycamore tree. William Craft and Ellis Neal, the others concerned in the tragedy, are in jail at Lexington, under sentence of death.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

SEVENTH WEEK.

Let other lands exulting, glean
The apple from the pine,
The orange from its glossy green,
The cleater from the vine;
But let the good old corn adorn
The hills our fathers trod;
Still let us, for his golden corn
Send up our thanks to God.
—JOHN G. WHITTIER.

If I owned a thousand acres in the garden of Eden, I would'nt plant nary a hill o' corn.
—I. COLUMBUS.

Monday morning was bright and beautiful. Ichabod bought him a new palmleaf hat the Saturday evening previous, and on Sunday, the Widder Gilman came over and cut his hair. She is Homer's mother. She hired one room of Columbus to store her spare furniture in and paid the rent by boarding with him one or two days each week. The arrangement was a profitable one for her, and an agreeable one to him, for he was an admirer of female beauty, and the Widder Gilman was an angel with a winning smile, false teeth and a black wig.

On the farm business was coming on with a rush. Columbus needed a second hand to do light work and assist at the chores. Therefore hired for six months a boy who had previously worked in the family, Ellic Jordan by name. He was a trusty, active boy about sixteen years of age, and Columbus was confident that with his assistance the work could be kept up to the scratch. The program for the week was plowing the corn ground and planting the corn.

Monday, May 15th.—Columbus plowed corn ground all day, that is, he plowed at it. The field was quite stony, and as there had been no rain since last Saturday the ground was rapidly drying out. After trying four plows, he settled down on the old Curtis iron beam, and I got four new points in order to have a good supply. He broke one and wore one out before night. Ellic sawed wood and planted sweet corn. I got one quart of Peter Henderson's new patent sixteen rowed everlasting, eternal, evergreen sweet corn at the very low price of two dollars per quart. It is warranted to grow six ears two feet long on each stalk. One ear of this green corn will make a good meal for a common family. I had it sent on last week by express, and no one else in this section has any seed like it.

Tuesday, May 17th—Columbus plowed corn ground all day. Wore out another point. Ellic cut asparagus and got two hundred weight of mill feed for the cows. In the afternoon Ellic planted beets in the sand knoll east of the house. I was very fortunate in securing some of Ferry's latest improved tap-root Egyptian beet. I took a six inch post hole auger and lowered a hole about three feet deep, put in one foot of good compost, then a layer of plaster, then a layer of muck, filled the hole with surface soil and planted three beet seeds in one of these hills. Ichabod says the best gardeners in Canada always plant their beets and parsnips in this manner. By this process I expect to raise beets three feet long and four feet around.

Wednesday, May 18th.—Columbus plowed corn ground all day. Only wore out two points. Ellic planted beets. Got in twenty hills and ran out of seed.

Thursday, May 19th — Columbus plowed corn ground all day. Ellic drew straw and mulched the old strawberry patch. The baby swallowed an over-coat button this forenoon and Ichabod had to go to town for the doctor, which delayed him about two hours.

Friday, May 20th.—Columbus and Ellic both harrowed corn ground.—Borrowed neighbor Colton's little black pony and rigged up a second team with my Roxy. Ichabod hitched the old heavy team to the new drag but as that was the lightest harrow, he evened the matter by hitching the small team to the heavy drag. When supper time came, Roxy was badly sprained in one ancle and went to the house on three feet. Columbus administered a mustard poultice and a camphor bath that evening which helped her considerably.

Saturday, May 21st—Columbus harrowed corn ground till noon with the heavy drag. Ellic filed off the teeth of the other drag during the same time. After dinner Ichabod hitched on to the sharpened drag. While turning it over he let it drop and one tooth went through the toe of his boot pinning him to the ground. His cries soon brought Ellic to his aid and he was released. Ellic assisted him upon Kit's back and he rode to the house. It took his wife two hours to get his boot off and he was laid up till the next Monday morning. The balance of the afternoon Ellic cut wood to last over Sunday.

"Now then," said Columbus as I was discussing his hurt on Saturday evening, "you see what comes of trying to plant corn. I knew some bad luck was coming. I felt it in my bones. During the forty years I have worked at farming, I never plowed such a stony field before. It is awful. In all my days I never found so hard a field to plow, and I s'pose I'll have to be tumblin' over these same stones all summer cultivating the corn. Now if you had put in peas, when they were once harrowed in that would end the worsted till harvest time. If I owned a thousand acres in the Garden of Eden I would'nt plant nary a hill o'corn. I guess, young man, you'll follow my advice hereafter. But now we've got into the job it must be finished if it takes a leg. You get two double steel spring lock-stitch lightning corn planters, and two stout boys and I'll have the corn in early next week. But if I had my way I'd put in peas yet."

Let other lands exulting, raise
The different kinds o' crops,
The thistles of Ontario,
Partaters, wheat and hops.
But never let the corn deface
The hills our fathers trod;
There's nothing like a crop of peas
On a heavy clover sod.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

TECUMSEH RESOLVES TO PROPERLY OBSERVE THE COMING FOURTH.

A Rousing Meeting to Consider the Question—Two Efficient Committees Appointed and the Work Already Begun.

Tuesday evening a good number attended the called meeting at the Council building to see whether or not we should celebrate the coming 4th of July. All present seemed to favor the object of the meeting and decided that Tecumseh should have a fourth of July celebration. Below we give the minutes of the meeting.

On motion A. W. Mills was called to the chair and G. N. Stacy chosen secretary. Remarks were made by Dr. Hause, J. Davidson, Perry Hosmer, M. P. Brown and others, and on motion the following committees were appointed: Executive committee, J. Davidson, Perry Hosmer, H. W. Stevens, J. W. Cole and Thos. Adamson. Finance committee, C. A. Slayton, A. W. Mills and S. W. Anderson.

Meeting then adjourned until Monday evening June 12, at the Council building at 7:30 o'clock. The gentlemen appointed on the committees are the proper men for their places and will attend to their part of the work. Now all that is necessary is for our business men to come down with their share of the funds and Tecumseh can have as good a celebration as will be held in Michigan.

Since the above was in type we learn that the executive committee have corresponded with Hon. Chas. S. May by telegraph and have engaged him to deliver the oration. Other attractions will be announced next week.

Michigan Farmer: Mr. M. Davidson, of Tecumseh, has been making some additions to his herd of Shorthorns, having purchased two heifers of Wm. Curtis & Sons, of Addison, Lenawee County. One of these is the 18th Duchess of Hillsdale by 22d Duke of Hillsdale 29256 out of 4th Duchess of Hillsdale. The other is Mary 3d by Golddust, out of Mary (Vol. 15, p. 738) by Ratler 8990. They are both in calf to Lork Barrington, of Hillhurst, the bull selected by the Messrs. Curtis from the Cochrane herd. Besides these Mr. Davidson has purchased the bull, 9th Prince of Argyle, 42362. His sire was Proud Duke of Fairview, 20720 out of Miss Argyle 2d, by imported Duke of Wicken, 14130, and his dam was Miss Argyle 3th. He is also from the Curtis herd. Mr. Davison has now a herd of 25 head, which he laid the foundation for some years ago by purchasing some stock which came from the herd of the late Edwin Smith, of Clinton, and crossing with bulls generally from the Curtis herd.

A CORRESPONDENT signing himself "Taxpayer" has the following to say in the Blissfield Advance: "The people of Lenawee county will again be called upon to vote to raise by tax a sum of money sufficient to build a court house in the city of Adrian.—Will they do it? Will they tax themselves fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars to ornament the city of Adrian while the city refuses to add one dollar in her own behalf? The money will have to be loaned and the interest paid, and that probably to some money lender of the city. Would it not be best to rent, as we now do, and save one-half the interest and be just as well accommodated, until the people of Adrian come to their senses and make a decent donation to help ornament their city?"

THE reunion at Detroit on the 15th inst promises to be a grand affair.—Several veterans will attend from this vicinity.

R. C. VAN ANTWERP makes the best Ice Cream as usual, and if the weather ever warms up he will drive a good trade.

SHOULD the weather hold good there will be a very large attendance at the State Sunday School Convention next week.

THE Tecumseh fire department have received an invitation from Blissfield to participate in the Fourth of July celebration there.

MISS RACHEL MOSHER, of Springville, was in town last Monday on her way to Morenci, where she will remain the most of this week.

THE rifle raffle for the benefit of P. J. Welling last week resulted in a net gain of $50 for him. Jim Cole and Geo. Adamson drew the rifles.

GEO. SUTFIN was arrested yesterday charged with being a common tippler. He was sent over to Adrian to board with Sheriff Bidwell for three months.

WE have received a copy of the premium list for the fifth annual fair of Lenawee county. The fair this year will hold four days, on Sept. 26, 27, 28 and 29, 1882.

THE local Board of Health have received from the State Board a large number of circulars on the restriction and prevention of diphtheria, which are being distributed this week.

BE sure and hear Rev. F. T. Bayley, on "Mysteries of Christianity, are there an objection to it" next Thursday morning at 10:30. Free to all.—Mr. B. is a live and original thinker.

C. H. HOPKINS has just completed an oil painting of the late John P. Silvers, of Clinton. It is a master piece of work and will be prized very highly by the relatives and friends of "Uncle John."

THE Adrian Local Telephone Exchange was started May 20, 1881, with 43 subscribers, and there are now 82 wires connected. Mt. Clemens started last fall with ten names and they now have over thirty.

THE Tecumseh High School graduating exercises will take place on Thursday, June 29th. Extensive preparations are in progress to make it one of the most creditable commencements yet held.

THE Ice Cream Festival advertised to take place at Springville on Friday evening last has been postponed to Saturday evening of this week, June 10th. Those interested will please bear the date in mind.

Adrian Press: Fred Rosacrans was a base ball player—good one too—and now he is postmaster of Tecumseh.—Young men, neglect not your early training. Fred has now got his innings. Fair bawl, Mr. Umpire.

THE grand prize drill and sham-battle at Detroit will come off on Thursday, June 15th. It will be the greatest military exhibition ever seen in Michigan. Grand stand tickets are now on sale at Whitney's music store.

JUDGE STACY'S law office was connected with the Adrian telephone exchange last week.

MRS. JOHN BAILEY, nee Maggie Frazer of Detroit, has been visiting in town for a few days.

JOHN R. CLARK spoke to a good attendance, giving "Man in Blemish and Beauty" at Raisin Valley, on Tuesday evening. His next lecture at Theatre Comique, Detroit, is on "Boy Life As It Is."

SINK'S new rooms in the third story of the hotel are being finished. They will make as fine a lot of desirable hotel rooms as can be found in the state. He will have them furnished ready for occupancy some time in July.

LET the Opera House be filled on Wednesday and Thursday evenings to hear Vincent, the founder of the Chautauqua S. S. Assembly. Proceeds of lectures to go into the State S. S. treasury to help in the work of the state.

THE Hudson Post has caught the improvement fever and has got a brand new suit. It is a very neat dress and becomes the Post exceedingly. We are glad to note this sign of prosperity on the part of our Hudson neighbor.

ALL old soldiers are entitled to a copy of the book entitled "Michigan in the War." H. W. Stevens has received a supply of the necessary blanks. Any one desiring the book can call upon him and have the proper papers executed.

THE Michigan Central has its branch line to Mackinac now finished and trains are running regularly between the straits and Detroit. It forms the shortest line from Detroit to the upper peninsula, and is destined to become a favorite route of travel.

WOULD it not be a good plan for the people of Tecumseh to mow the streets in front of their residences the last of this week. We shall be honored with a large number of visitors next week and a little labor in the direction suggested would improve the appearance of the village very much.

THE telephone line between Ann Arbor and Adrian is now being constructed. The poles were set between Adrian and Tecumseh last week.—This week the poles will be set to Ann Arbor, and the wire will be stretched next week. The line will probably be in working order by the 25th inst.

IT seems to be a fixed fact that Fred Rosarans will soon be installed as postmaster at Tecumseh. Fred has lots of friends here who will rejoice at his advancement, and Mr. Tribou retires from the office with the good opinion of every one. The best word we can say for the new encumbent is that we believe he will make as acceptable a public officer as the retiring postmaster has proven himself to be.

Jackson Citizen: Would it not be appropriate and a grateful manifestation of regard for the memory of the heroic dead, for families and individuals to cultivate a plat of flowers especially dedicated to fallen soldiers, the blossom and bloom to be used only in decorating their graves on the 30th of May? Aside from the kindly sentiment that would attach to such a procedure, of which both old and young would partake, it would always insure an abundance of flowers—the public tributes of love—spontaneously contributed, for the purposes of Decoration day.

Detroit Evening News: It only took a few days for Lenawee county to catch, try, convict and sentence for life a man who pushed his mother-in-law down stairs. The lady has since died of old age and the son-in-law is dry-rotting in the Michigan state prison. Later on a young man with plenty of cheek, a host of friends, and perhaps a few local accomplices, tried to swindle the city out of $150,000, actually stole almost as much from confiding friends, was assisted to escape, and is still at large; yet no one even affects to believe very strenuous efforts have been made to catch him.—Truly, Lenawee justice is a queer thing.

Detroit's Big Day.

The Light Guard of Adrian will go to Detroit early on the morning of Thursday the 15th inst., by special train on the Lake Shore road, to participate in the grand military prize drill and sham battle, given in connection with the great reunion of the army of the Potomac. A grand time may be expected, and the guard cordially invite their many friends throughout the country to accompany them. The special will leave Adrian at an early hour, and fare will be as low as by any other route. Particulars as to time of leaving, and cost of round trip tickets will be announced in a few days. President Arthur, Generals Grant, Sherman, Hancock, Sheridan, and other eminent union Soldiers, will be in Detroit on this day, and the occasion will never probably be paralleled again in the state. Do not fail to go with the guard. Let the men of Lenawee attend en masse.

THE LECTURE FIELD.

The lecture field as an efficient means of educating our youths, and enlightening those of maturer years who may seek knowledge in any form is known to possess unbounded merit. The medical student owes as much, if not more, to his lecture course, as to the text books of dry abstract propositions of materia medica, for any degree of wisdom attained in his profession. So with the attorney-at-law and the members of many other professions. It is not strange therefore that great improvements have been brought into this useful branch of educational methods. If lectures have heretofore been interesting and instructive with the simple elucidation of subjects by learned talkers with strong and profound arguments only, how much more so they must be at the present day when, by the use of the magic lantern exact photographic representations of subjects under consideration are presented to the eye of the student in a way to at once convey the most accurate idea of the subject which hours of description and expatiation by the best and most learned of talkers could not so well accomplish.

The usefulness of the magic lantern, whether called stereopticon, sciopticon, stereo panopticon, euryscope or any other high sounding name, but magic lantern still, in lectures on microscopy in placing enlarged views of objects under investigation before the eyes of the class, can be readily appreciated. But the lantern is not more important or instructive in any of the lecture fields than that on foreign or home travel. A lecture on foreign travel at the present day would be a failure without the use of the magic lantern to present in lifelike shape, through the medium of photography, the scenes and incidents referred to by the lecturer.

As we have mentioned before in the columns of our paper, Mr. L. F. Wheeler has purchased an entire new complete and highly improved lantern outfit, consisting of a pair of the finest high power dissolving view lanterns sold in the United States, calcium light outfit and several magnificent collections of views, every one of which were selected by himself in person during his recent visit to Philadelphia. Mr. Wheeler intends to make a tour of Michigan and the great lakes during the summer, with two objects in view; first to give a series of entertainments, and second, to secure a set of views of the many places of interest in the region of the great lakes, for a series of original lectures on the Great Lakes of North America. Mr. Wheeler's talent as an artist and his experience on the stage, assures his audiences in advance of an excellent treat in store whenever he appears before them. To the people of his native town, Tecumseh, who are well acquainted with his talents, no word of commendation is necessary. Here he is known as an excellent portrait, landscape and marine painter. He has delivered successful lectures on the chemistry and history of photography, on modern vs. ancient art, and kindred topics before the once popular literary society, which society he did much to build up and sustain for a long time. His knowledge of photography has been put to practical use by thousands of the people of Michigan and Ontario, and as a theatrical scene painter many halls in Michigan, Ontario, and one theatre in Chicago can testify as to his merit.

We hope and expect to hear of his perfect success in the field that he has long been preparing to enter. The people of Tecumseh and vicinity will soon have an opportunity to see and hear him in the new departure. Mr. Wheeler will be accompanied by Mr. Fred Van Camp, whose fine cornet solos will be a feature of the entertainments.

THE Pioneer meeting at Adrian did not come to time last Saturday, but the rain did. As there is no water route between Cambridge and Adrian the president did not put in an appearance at all. The secretary went down from Tecumseh on the morning train and after searching for the pioneers at all the hotels he finally found D. D. Sinclair, under an umbrella, on Maumee street, and authoring him to conduct the meeting if there should be one he returned home on the noon train. A few citizens of Adrian assembled in the afternoon and adjourned, after passing a vote instructing the president and secretary to call another meeting at some future date.

THE reunion of the "Army of the Potomac" at Detroit next week will undoubtedly be the greatest military gathering ever held in the state. Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Hancock will be present, and a lot of other military celebrities.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is beyond a doubt the best medicine known for all aches and pains, Rheumatism and Kidney affection, in fact it demolishes pain. It is equally good for man or beast. Every bottle warranted to do as represented.

GRAND PUBLIC PARADE AT ADRIAN.

Twenty-two Elephants in Line—The Magnificent Pageants of "Lalla Rookh" and "Cleopatra"—Bower of Beauty—Three Great Bands—Jubilee Singers—400 Gaily-Caparisoned Horses—A Mile of Chariots, Tableau Cars, Cages, etc.

On Friday, June 16th, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock in the forenoon, Adam Forepaugh's Great Railroad Show will appear upon the streets of Adrian in processional order. Our exchanges from the places where the establishment has exhibited, assert that in extent and magnificence this display exceeds all spectacular or show parades ever made by any exhibition in the United States.

The procession is led by the beautiful pageant illustrating the departure of Lalla Rookh from Delhi. The lovely princess who is personified by the handsomest woman in America, and for whose services in this pageant Mr. Forepaugh pays the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars, is seen seated in a genuine East Indian Howdah, upon the back of a kingly elephant. Maids of honor, servitors, and all the pomp and wealth of an Eastern monarch's court, surround her.

Another most attractive and novel feature of the parade is the presentation, for the first time in America, of the fascinating Egyptian spectacle, "Cleopatra Journeying to Meet Mark Antony." The famous and beautiful queen is personated, seated in a magnificent barge ablaze with gold, and all the surroundings are in keeping with the account given by the most reliable historians of this remarkable journey. Then follow twenty-two huge elephants, attached to chariots ablaze with gold and glitter; two martial bands enliven the occasion; the "Grand Bashaw," with his retinue of slaves, cup-bearers, sultanas, etc., is represented, riding upon white camels and black dromedaries; upon a colossal chariot, designated as the "Car of India," a monster living lion is placed and by his side sits a youthful maiden with her hand resting upon the head of the savage brute. A monster cage with glass sides and ends, is filled with anacondas and pythons, and in the midst of this wriggling mass of serpents the spectators behold an East Indian Snake Charmer dallying with the shining, slimy monsters.

Ten Ceylon Elephants draw another chariot, followed by the "Car of the Seasons" and the "Chariot of Olympus," which is embellished with representations of the fates, furies, graces, sirens, nymphs, gods, heroes and men. Next the Leo De Westes' Hanovarian Stud of twenty-two performing stallions and ponies in elegant and elaborate trappings, followed by opened dens of lions, and tigers are to be seen at intervals. A mammoth steam orchestrion mingles its shrill notes with those of the bands, and at intervals are to be seen mardigras masqueraders in fanciful and mirth-provoking costumes.

An instructive as well as humorous feature of the pageant is the appearance of a real slave-singing band of old-time old plantation darkies. All were formerly slaves, not one of them has ever been away from the South, and seated upon cotton bales, in a genuine Southern mule team, this band of freedmen sing, as the procession moves, the camp-meeting melodies and songs of the slave cabins, as was customary in slavery days.

Three greet bands of music are in position along the line of the cavalcade, droves of camels, diminutive ponies, ornate tableau cars, and nearly a mile of statuary adorned and beautifully embellished animal cages, all drawn by hundreds of plumed steeds, drivers uniformed, constitute some of the attractive features of this princely pageant. Our readers should reach Adrian by nine o'clock in the forenoon, in order to behold this grand free-for-all holiday parade.

"Send for Mother."

"Dear me! It wasn't enough for me to nurse and raise a family of my own, but now when I am old and expect to take a little comfort here, it is all the time 'send for mother.'" And the dear old soul growls and grumbles, but dresses herself as fast as she can, notwithstanding. After you have trotted her off, and got her safely in your home, and she flies around administering her remedies and rebukes by turns, you feel easier. It is right now, or soon will be—mother's come!

In sickness, no matter who is there or how many doctors quarrel over your case, everything goes wrong, somehow, till you send for mother.

In trouble the first thing you think of is "Send for mother."

But this is as ludicrous as well as it touching a sight. The verdant young couple to whom baby's extraordinary grimaces and alarming yawns, which threaten the dislocation of its chin; its wonderful sleeps, which it accomplishes with its eyes half open, and no perceptible flutter of breath on its lips causing the young mother to imagine it's dead this time, and to shriek out, "Send for mother!" in tones of anguish—this young couple in the light of experience which three or four babies bring, find they have been ridiculous and given mothers a good many trots for nothing.

Did anyone ever send for mother and she fail to come? Never, unless sickness or the infirmities of age prevented her. As when, in your childhood, those willing feet responded to your call, so they still do, and will continue to do as long as they are able. And when the summons comes which none yet disregarded, though it will be a happy day for her, it will be a dark, sad one for you, when God, too, will send for your mother.

The Cause of Dew.

If dew fell it would fall for the same reason that rain falls; but dew does not fall. It is simply a deposit of moisture always contained in the air to a greater or less degree, and which, when there is enough of it, will always form on any cold body exposed to the moist air, in precisely the same way that a cold bottle or stone, taken from a cold cellar and suddenly exposed in the shade to the moist, warm summer air, will become wet. This is not sweating nor does this moisture come out of the boitle or stone as many people believe, but from the air. It is for the same reason that moisture will condense against the window-panes when the air is cold outside and moist inside, the moisture slowly freezing while its deposits form crystal ice which we so often admire in winter When the weather is cool enough the moisture will even freeze plants and grass, and then we call it hoar frost; if it does not freeze it is stimply dew. The only point left to be explained is why does the ground become so cool during the night, so much cooler than the air above, as to cause the latter to deposit its moisture. This was for many years a vexed problem till Wells first suggested the radiation of obscure heat, which takes place from the surface of the earth through the clear atmosphere into the space above, and so causes the surface to become much cooler than the air itself. He demonstrated this by means of thermometers placed at different heights, and also by the fact that dew is only deposited on cloudless nights. When there are clouds they reflect the heat or prevent it from escaping. The surface of the earth thus being kept from cooling, no dew is deposited.

To be beautiful we must cultivate the mind and develop the heart in the highest degree.

We must feed the mind by reading and meditation until the intellectual fire burns with a steady flame, irradiating the face with its pure brilliancy and suffusing the countenance with a calm and holy light; we must fill the brain with holy thoughts, and live, as it were, in an atmosphere of grand ideas which will lift us up above the belittling cares of earth.

We must cherish every kind impulse and generous disposition, making love the ruling passion of the heart, the ordering principle and inspiring motive of life. The more kindness the more beauty; the more love the more loveliness.

We must put a great organizing and ennobling purpose into the will, and concentrate our thoughts and affections upon the accomplishment of it, until enthusiasm wells up in the heart, suffusing the countenance and rebuilding the body on its own divine plan.

And this is the beauty that is abiding. Mere physical good looks fade with the years, bleach out with sickness, and yield to the slow decay of mortality. But the beauty that has its origin in kind dispositions and noble purposes and great thoughts outlasts youth and maturity, and increases with age, and like the lucious peach that comes to us in autumn ripeness, covered with the delicate flush of purple and crimson, is never so beautiful as when waiting to be plucked by the gardener's hand, silently witnessing to the full, rich perfection time works out.

Petty Worries.

What a blessed thing it is that we can forget. To-day's troubles look large, but a week hence they will be forgotten and buried out of sight. If you would keep a book and daily put down the things that worry you and see what becomes of them it would be of a benefit to you.

You allow a thing to annoy you just as you allow a fly to settle on you and plague you; and you lose your temper—or rather get it, for when men are surcharged with temper they are said to have lost it,—and you justify yourself for being thrown off your balance by causes which you do not trace out. But if you would see what it was that threw you off your balance, before breakfast, and put it down in a little book, and follow it up and out and ascertain what becomes of it, you wouldsee what a fool you were in the matter.

The art of forgetting is a blessed art, but the art of overlooking is quite as important. And if we should take time to write down the original progress and outcome of a few of our troubles, it would make us so ashamed of the fuss we make over them that we should be glad to drop such things and bury them at once in eternal forgetfulness. Life is too short to be worn out by petty worries, frettings, hatred and vexation.

A Word of Advice.

It is as easy to be a good man as a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind, would gain credit, give more time to attend to business, and add to the profit and reputation of those who work organ. Be prompt; honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you go out on business, attend promptly to the matter on hand, then as promptly tend to your own business. Do not stop to tell stories during business hours. If you have a place of business, be there when wanted. No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons. Never "fool" on business matters. Have order, system regularity and promptness. Do not meddle with business you know nothing of. Never buy an article you do not need, simply because it is cheap, and the man who sells it will take it out in trade. Trade is money. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path—more miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick. Pay as you go; a man of honor respects his word as he does his bond. Aid, but never beg. Relieve others; when you can, but never give what you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say no. No necessity for snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully. Have but few confidants. Use your brains rather than those of others. Learn to act and think for yourselves. Be vigilant. Keep ahead rather than behind the time. Young men, cut this out and place it, by careful perusal in the golden store-house of your brain, and if you find that there is folly in the argument let us know.

About Style.

Perhaps even more women might rise to positions of distinction in many occupations for them were it not for the time and strength consequent on attention to details of dress and fashion. With most women dress in all its details and necessities of shopping, fitting, etc., is a business requiring an average of three or four hours daily. Subtract this from the hours of a working-day and it involves a great loss of valuable time and strength. A woman thoroughly devoted to any art cannot dress after the regulation style and pattern. If the man desires to step out on the street for any purpose he puts on his coat and goes. If the woman so goes out it involves an outlay of at least fifteen or twenty minutes time to "fix up." There are exceptions, but this is the rule. Dress and the requirements and encumbrances of fashion prove a constant draught, impediment and encumbrance on the woman's time and strength—the young and pretty woman being here referred to. In this age of competition success in any occupation must be gained at the cost of constant, unintermitting attention and perseverance. The working editor, merchant, lawyer or artist cannot go with gloved hands, and he often gains time at the expense of a well-worn coat in the public thoroughfare. Almost without being aware of the motive, man's garb has, during the last hundred years, more and more adapted itself to the practical needs of business. Even the dandy of to-day copies the general style of the worker. How much business of any description would a man now accomplish if clad in the ribbons, frills and ruffles of the court popinjays of Charles the Second's time? Yet, relative to her own peculiar fashion, the woman retains all the encumbrances of that era.

Gymnastics as a Cure of Disease.

Boerhaave, the great Dutch physician, incribed on the wall of his lecture-room, "I gave the medicine, God cured the disease." He was far in advance of the doctors of his era, and promulgated ideas which were then novel, but which science has since made common place.

In an age of dosing, when quantity was as much thought of as quality, he said:

"When I reflect on the immunity of hardworking people from the effects of wrongliving and overfeeding, I cannot help thinking that most of our fashionable diseases might be cured mechanically, instead of chemically, by climbing a bitterwood tree, or chopping it down, if you like, rather than swallowing a decoction of its disgusting leaves."

Each schoolboy now knows that physical vigor is the basis of bodily health, and may only be retained by exercise. But in those days few physicians cared to utter the truth, even if they themselves knew it. The ancient Greeks, knowing that an effeminate man is half sick, provided gymnastic exercises. They used these to promote health and prevent disease. An old Greek doctor, Asclepiadese, is quoted as an authority by Dr. Oswald to enforce the idea that gymnastics will cure disease.

The philosopher had found that health could be preserved, and if lost restored, by physical exescise alone, and not only discarded the use of internal remedies, but made public declaration that he would forfeit all claim to the title of physician if he should ever fall sick or die but by violence or extreme old age.

Asclepiadese kept his word, for he lived upward of a century, and died from the effects of an accident. He used to prescribe a course of gymnastics for every form of bodily ailment.

It is questionable, indeed, whether Peter the Great ever meant St. Petersburg for a permanent court residence and capital. As late as 1724, seven months before his death, it was not here, but at Moscow, that he celebrated the coronation of his wife, Catherine, and if he spent much of his time on this spot, it was chiefly because a work of such magnitude as he had undertaken required the master's incessant presence. For the rest, all that Peter wanted here was a port, and could, under the circumstances find no better. He built it on conquered ground out of all the boundaries of Old Russia, amid a Finnish population, the former subjects of Sweden.

He drafted his workmen among the serfs of all his provinces, and wasted 100,000 human lives in the achievement, labor being as cheap for him as it ever was for the kingly builders of the Egyptian pyramids. The site was a swamp—an unsafe and unhealthy swamp; so unsafe that some of its finest monuments—the monolith column of Alexander I. and the Isaac Church—show in their deep crevices the rapid decay to which the treacherous ground underneath is dooming them; so unsafe, besides, as to be subject to inundations, like the ground of ancient Rome; for the city has already been destructively flooded eight times since 1703, the date of its foundation.

WARNER'S

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and PLEURISY, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.

IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rate charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $30. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 932 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. Fruit Canning.

It is not many years since every good housewife felt called upon at least once a year to take a great deal of trouble in preserving a supply of fruit for use during the winter months. The purchase of fruit-jars, the picking, or purchase, and sorting of fruit, the purchase of sugar, the boiling and preparation of the syrup, oftentimes in the hottest weather, was a task which many a good housewife looked forward to with some trepidation, while the uncertainties attending the keeping qualities of the preserves, after they were manufactured, made this a rather undesirable feature in housekeeping.

Within a few years, however, all this has become unnecessary; the manufacture of preserves on a large scale, with skilled labor and improved appliances, has proven, as in many other branches of manufacture, a great success; and while there are some thrifty housewives who still think their "home-made" preserves are better than the "store" article, it is undoubtedly true that high-class preserves are decidedly fine, and in a number of cases are more appetizing and delicate than the home-made article. I say this with all due respect for the skill shown by many careful, conscientious housewives throughout the land, but in this case the doctrine "survival of the fittest," I think, is quite applicable. Too many people are apt to sit down, fold their hands, and disclaim against anything not made at home, at least as far as preserves and candied fruits are concerned. The sword, I must admit, cuts both ways. While I have wrestled carefully and conscientiously at many houses with alleged preserves made at home, I have suffered the "pangs of Tantalus" from atrocious compounds put on the market by conscienceless manufacturers. For the benefit of those who desire to "do up" their own fruits I append a few trustworthy receipts:

Fill the jar with the desired fruit while cold. Make a syrup of sugar (quantity as given below) by boiling well to prevent fermentation, or it can be put on fruit dry. Fill jar with fruit, pour sugar over it until jar is full half-way up the neck; screw on covers of jars without rubber rings; put a board indented with holes in bottom of wash-boiler and stand jars on it; fill boiler with cold water up to neck of jars; boil (time necessary for different fruits is given below,) then remove jars one by one, take off covers, fill with boiling water, put on rubber rings and screw covers on tightly as possible. The same process is used in preserving all kinds of fruits.

Fortunes for Farmers and Mechanics.

Thousands of dollars can be saved by using proper judgment in taking care of the health of yourself and family. If you are Billious, have sallow complexion, poor appetite, low and depressed spirits, and generally debilitated, do not delay a moment, but go at once and procure a bottle of those wonderful Electric Bitters, which never fail to cure, and that for the trifling sum of fifty cents.—Tribune.—Sold by all druggists at 50c.

An advertisement in a country paper commenced thus: "To be let immediately, or sooner, if necessary—"

A young lady who had ordered a pair of unusually high-heeled boots was flushed by the announcement by Bridget, fresh from answering the door bell: "If ye plaze, miss, there's a man in the hall below wid a pair of sthilts for yez."

Johnny kissed me when we met,
Jumping from the car he sat in;
Mrs. Grundy—you who get
Gossip in your list—put that in,
Say I'm Tomboy—say I'm mad—
Say that modesty has left me;
Say—but don't forget to add—
Johnny kissed me!

Mother of esthetic young lady at Long Branch—"Julia, you haven't been in bathing yet?" Julia—"No, mamma." Mother—"What is the reason?" Julia—"I don't like to tell, mamma." Mother—"Stuff; let me know at once." Julia (blushing)—"Because Mr. DeLacy's dog comes down to look at me every time I go to the bathhouse, and I know Mr. DeLacy sends him."

"That is the smartest dog that ever walked on four legs," exclaimed the deacon enthusiastically. His visitor whistled for the animal to draw near, and when it approached stroked it affectionately, and asked for some proof of his intelligence. "It's a secret," returned the deacon, "but I'm willing to tell you in confidence. Whenever the parson calls while I am out, that dog sits close to the parlor door and never takes its eye from the key-hole."

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

Keep Them Bright.

Keep your face, your heart and your home bright. Don't let the cobwebs gather in the corners of the pretty sitting room; or dust accumulate on the furniture till you can write your name thereon. No matter what is on hand, or how much you have to do, take time at least once a day to tidy your rooms, and gather fresh flowers. You will never regret it, even though at the close of your life you may not possess quite so much of the world's goods as some of your neighbors. It is the best plan by far to enjoy life as it comes, and this you can never do in a slovenly, disordered home. Would you keep your husband from evil associations, and your children from wayward paths? Remember there is nothing in this world so attractive to a man as a pleasant home, and a smiling face therein, and as for the little feet, they will not be apt to wander far, so long as your face beams with the love and solicitude that your heart bears for them. A wife or a mother is a queen, always. Not of vast domains, to be sure, and not of society, but of the most sacred spot on earth to every human heart—home. You never thought of it, perhaps, but it is true, and it is indeed true also, that there is no more pitiable sight than one of these "queens" who do not, either from want of judgment, or lack of will, govern her subjects aright. Did you ever see a truly happy family without a loving, watchful and affectionate wife and mother at its head? The father may be sour, hard, or cross-grained, but if the mother is all right, there is sure to be happiness in that family.

A dog in New Mexico returning one evening with his sheep to the fold, discovered that his master was still in his shanty, and kept very quiet. The next evening it was the same. But after penning up the sheep the dog smelled about the door, scratched, barked, and even howled, as he was very hungry, but his master did not move. The dog, true to his appointed duty, went out with the sheep on the third day, but that night when he drove the flock into their pen the last one to attempt to get in became the victim of the dog's appetite. This method of providing for his own wants became a part of the faithful dog's duty. Every evening the last sheep to try to enter was seized by him and served for supper and breakfast and for dinner the following day. The ranch to which the dog belonged was in a solitary part of the territory, and out of the track of travel or visitation. For two years from the time of his master's death—ascertained by data left by the latter—the faithful dog tended the flock commited to his charge, and had fresh mutton for his supper every night. The flock was not decimated by this steady drain upon its resources. On the contrary, it increased in numbers, and when at the end of two years from the time of the death of the proprietor, the ranch was visited, and the remains of the owner found, the dog was still at his post of duty, jealously guarding his flock, and driving them to the best pastures every day and to the fold at night, before which he slept, to keep the wild sheep-eaters of the plains at a civil distance.

Home Love.

Home love is the best love. The love that you were born to is the sweetest you will ever have on earth. You, who are so anxious to escape from the home nest, pause a moment and remember this is so. It is right that the hour should come when you, in your turn, should become a wife and mother and give the best love to others; but that will be just it. Nobody—not a lover, not a husband—will ever be so tender or so true as your mother or your father. Never again, after strangers have broken the beautiful bond, will there be anything so sweet as the little circle of mother, father and children, where you were cherished, protected and kept from harm. You may not know it now, but you will know it some day. Whomsoever you may marry, true and good though he may be, after the love days are over and the honeymoon has waned, give you only what you deserve of love and sympathy—and usually much less; never more. You must watch and be wary, lest you lose that love which came in through the eyes because the one who looked thought you beautiful. But those who bore you, who loved you when you were that dreadful little object, a small baby, and thought you exquisitely beautiful and wonderfully brilliant—they do not care for faces that are fairer and forms that are more graceful than yours. You are their very own, and so better to them always than others.

Every Day Thoughts.

Ah, how sad and vain a thing is regret. When too late, some past wrong-doing will burden the memory, and the bitter truth we tried to veil, even from our own hearts, is revealed in all its undisguise. Who has not to repent some slight, thoughtless omission of duty or kindness toward those whom they love? What even are regrets compared with the anguish of feeling of having parted from a friend—perhaps from our best beloved—with unkind and cruel words? It may have been those words were uttered carelessly, lightly, as the wild and wanton breeze sweeps by; but they leave a pain, as the breeze leaves some scattered rose-leaves to mark its track. Or it may have been they were purposely spoken, prompted by pride and passion and imagined wrong. Such has been an episode in many a life. The cause we know not, any more than that of the little fragment from which I quote, whose actors and whose story are alike unknown. But what a fitting place and time was that for such a parting!

By the seething main,
While the dark wrack drives overhead.

And one is drifted out into the mist and storm—the other left to mourn the embittered past, pleading from the far spirit-land for that forgiveness earth cannot accord.

An Impossibility.

Deserving articles are always appreciated. The exceptional cleanliness of Parker's Hair Balsam makes it popular. Gray hairs are impossible with its occasional use.

ENGLISH INFANTRY.—The standard of height for the Infantry of the line is now five feet six inches, and for chest measurement it is thirty-four inches; no recruit is accepted who does not fulfill these requirements, which are in excess of those in all, and considerably higher than those in most Continental armies. Some, indeed, are in favor of lowering these standards, because in consequence of them we are forced to reject so many recruits whose chest measurement is only thirty-three inches, but whom, in every other respect, it would be desirable to enlist. Without in any way going back to the very low standards to which we have often had to resort in the days of long service, we would at any moment increase the number of our recruits very considerably by reducing our standard to that of Germany or of France. In 1873 there was in every 1,000 men in the army 412 under five feet seven inches, and 588 over that same height; in 1880 the numbers were 398 and 602 respectively. Surely these facts show a decided improvement in the physical strength of our soldiers, and afford a positive denial to all the wild statements which are so commonly bandied about as to the inferiority of the recruits who now enlist under the short service system, compared with those we used to obtain formerly.—English Paper.

A Capital Substitute.

We can't be boys or girls again. Age and infirmity are sure to come, but God did not ordain sickness. That is our fault. There is no Fountain of Youth, but there is a Fountain of Health, and its other name is Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It comes from Nature—from the fields and flowers, and like them is "very good." Try it for all complaints of women, Blood troubles, and pains and aches everywhere. If you can't get it at the store, send One Dollar for a bottle to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

A chicken when stripped of its plumage is said to be dressed. The girls of the ballet resemble the chicken in this regard, though they are not all chickens in years.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time!" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

Beware of Imitations.

In my last letter "the boys" and I have dug up a number of relics from these ruins, such as rude axes, whetstones, stones for grinding grain, and a great many fragments of pottery, which showed that this people was skilled in the art of making and ornamenting earthenware. We also found many pieces of bones, some of which were split lengthwise, probably for the purpose of getting out the marrow. I was fortunate enough to secure a flat stone 20 inches long, 15 wide and 2 inches thick which had evidently been used for grinding corn. I also found a smaller stone, circular, but flat on both sides which had probably been used as an upper mill stone.

COMMON COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH, MICH., Council Room, June 5, 1882.

Regular session. Present, the entire Council excepting Mr. Stout.

The minutes of the preceding meeting read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On streets:

Committee reported adversely upon the petition of James Montague and others, but recommending that a side walk be built from Montague's west line on the north line of Pottawatamie street to the east line of Ottawa street.

Report accepted and adopted and on motion Resolved, that this council do hereby require that a sidewalk be built along the north line of Pottawatamie street from the south-west corner of land owned by James Monteague to the east line of Ottawa street along the south side of that parcel of land owed by Augusta P. Lee, bounded north by an alley, east by Montague's land, south by Pottawatamie street, and west by Ottawa street, said walk to be four (4) feet in width of one and a half (1½) inch plank, not to exceed six (6) inches in width, laid lengthwise, upon burr or white oak stringers not more than two feet apart and double at joints, subject to the direction of the Street commissioner, within ten days from the date hereof; and that in case of any default the street commissioner is hereby directed to build said walk, and that payment therefor be required from the owner of the land adjoining.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

Marshall's Report:

The thirty-days having expired in which side-walks were to be rebuilt or repaired, the following persons have not complied with the notices served upon them for rebuilding said walks. L. Montgomery, D. Sholes, A. Hanford, A. H. Chaplin, G. W. Griffith, Mrs. Bird, Wm. Burrell, Brewer Estate. On May 20, 1882, Peter J. VanVleet burned the brush and rubbish on public ground corner of Kilbuck and Ottawa streets. A. H. Chaplin has not yet returned the four planks taken by him last winter. Report was accepted and adopted.

Recorder was instructed to draw resolutions compelling the above named persons to rebuild defective sidewalks and to submit them at next meeting. Marshall was instructed to notify said delinquents that said walks must be built before next meeting or steps would be taken to compel them to do so.

PETITIONS AND APPLICATIONS.

On motion Council then adjourned.

FREDERICK B. WOOD, Recorder.

Humbugged Again.

I saw so much said about the merits of Hop Bitters, and my wife who was always doctoring, and never well, teased me so urgently to get her some, I concluded to be humbugged again; and am glad I did, for in less than two months' use of the Bitters, my wife was cured, and she has remained so for eighteen months since. I like such humbugging.—H. T., St. Paul. —Pioneer Press.

AT the meeting of the Common Council, held last Monday evening, a resolution was passed granting to the Michigan Bell Telephone Company the right to run their State exchange line through the corporation, and connect such local lines to the same as they may hereafter desire, the lines to be established under the supervision of a special committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Root, Smith & Heesen. This committee have already fixed the location of the State line on the west side of Evans street to Mill street, and on the east side of Mill street to the north line of the village in Brownville. The local lines can be fixed hereafter as soon as it shall be known where the local patrons are located.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

MAY 29.—In the senate, Messrs. Cockrell, Sherman, and McMillan spoke in opposition to the bill to reimburse the Creek Indian orphan fund, which was laid over. An act was passed for the sale of the old postoffice site in New York for $500,000. Mr. Garland offered a resolution, which was adopted, for an inquiry into the necessity of aiding sufferers by the overflow in Arkansas. Mr. Lapham presented a resolution for the payment of $5,000 to the administratrix of John Q. Underwood for prosecuting his claim to a seat in the senate from Virginia. Mr. Plumb reported bills to set aside lands for a park in Arizona and to enlarge the powers of the department of agriculture. The Japanese indemnity fund bill came up, and Mr. Hale moved an amendment that payments be made in coin through the American minister. After a long debate the bill was thrown aside and the senate adjourned.

MAY 31.—In the senate, two reports were presented on a bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter. Mr. Cameron introduced a bill for a public building at Clarksburg, West Va. Mr. Logan presented an act to allow the widow of Minister Hurlbut his salary for one year. A long debate took place on the bill to reimburse the Creek orphan fund. A motion to indefinitely postpone the measure was voted down by 20 to 26. M. Cockrell secured the adoption of a clause to pay Creeks who were orphans in 1832, when the bill went over. Mr. Garland called up an act to grant the right of way through Indian Territory to the Mississippi, Albuquerque and Inter-Ocean railway, but Mr. Ingalls objected. The Japanese indemnity bill was taken up, and Mr. Morrill moved the repayment of the entire amount received as indemnity. Mr. Morgan stated that the Japanese minister assented to the proposition to deduct $140,000 to pay the claims of the Wyoming and Takiang. After remarks by several senators, an adjournment was ordered.

JUNE 1.—The senate passed a bill authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Sault Ste. Marie river, to connect with the Canadian roads. The bill to reimburse the Creek orphan fund was amended and passed. Mr. Allison reported the house bill to extend the charters of national banks, with sundry amendments. The army appropriation bill was called up. Mr. Bayard opposed compulsory retirement at 62, and Mr. Logan defended it. Mr. Butler gave notice of an amendment excepting Generals Sherman, Sheridan, Hancock, and Howard. Mr. Maxey announced a motion to strike the clause from the bill. A prolonged debate ensued, but no action was taken.

HOUSE.

MAY 29.—In the house, Mr. Reed called up the proposed amendment to the rules prohibiting dilatory motions on a contested election case. Mr. Randall raised a question of consideration. Mr. Kenna moved an immediate adjournment, and Mr. Blackburn proposed to adjourn over Decoration day. After a vote on the latter question Mr. Reed made the point of order that on a proposition to amend the rules dilatory motions can not be entertained. He cited a decision to that effect by Speaker Blaine, and Mr. Randall called up decisions in the British house of commons. Messrs. Kasson, Carlisle, Haskell, Blackburn, Robeson, Cox, Hooker, McLean, Reagan, Randall, and Hazelton aired their views on the issue, consuming three hours. The speaker sustained Mr. Reed's point of order. Mr. Randall took an appeal, which was tabled by 150 to 0. Mr. Cox presented a protest by one hundred democratic members. The report of the committee on rules was adopted by 150 to 2. Mr. Miller, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor on the South Carolina contested election case, when the house adjourned.

MAY 30.—In the house, Mr. Springer objected to the journal being approved, as it omitted mention of two important motions made by him and ignored by the speaker. In proceeding with his argument he was called to order, and on paying but little attention thereto he was informed that the sergeant-at-arms would force him to desist. Mr. Knott claimed that the speaker had made a mistake in refusing to entertain a legitimate motion. A proposition to correct the journal was lost, by 89 to 134. Mr. Miller then argued for two hours in support of the report of the elections committee on the South Carolina contested seat case, and exhibited tickets used in the elections in that state. Mr Davis, of Missouri, stated that the testimony in the case was all in the handwriting of Mr. Mackey. A recess to 8 o'clock was taken, at which hour Mr. Atherton moved to adjourn to morning. A claim that no quorum was present caused a call of the house, which consumed two hours. Mr. Calkins gave notice that he would close the debate to-day, and the house adjourned.

MAY 31.—The house spent the day on the South Carolina contested election, finally seating E. W. M. Mackey by a vote of 150 to 3. Mr. McLane then arose to a question of privilege, and introduced resolutions censuring Speaker Keifer for refusing to entertain the motion and appeal made by Mr. Springer on Monday. Mr. Reed, of Maine, immediately moved to table the resolution, and it was entertained by the speaker, thus cutting off Mr. McLane. The scene which followed was the wildest ever known in the house, fifty members shouting simultaneously for recognition, and Speaker Keifer being pale with anger. Finally, by a party vote, the resolutions were tabled. The republicans then called up the Florida case of Bisbee vs. Finley. The house voted to consider it, and then adjourned.

JUNE 1.—The house refused to consider anything but the Florida contested election case of Bisbee vs. Finley. Speeches were made by Messrs. Beltzhoover, Jones, McMillan, and Bisbee, when a resolution declaring the latter entitled to a seat was passed by 141 to 9, and he was sworn in. Mr. Page reported the river and harbor appropriation, and announced that on Monday he would move its passage under a suspension of the rules. Mr. Hazeltine called up the contested election case of Lowe vs. Wheeler, from Alabama, and the house decided to consider it. After some discussion the house adjourned.

JUNE 2.—The house took up the Alabama contested election case of Lowe vs. Wheeler, on which speeches were made by Messrs. Mills, Jones, Atherton, and Horr, when it was agreed that the previous question shall be called to-morrow. The general deficiency bill and the legislative, judicial, executive appropriation were reported, and referred to the committee of the whole.

JUNE 3.—The house resumed consideration of the Alabama contested election case, and after wrangling during the entire session the resolution declaring Lowe entitled to the seat occupied by Wheeler was adopted by a party vote except that Mr. J. R. Rice, of Ohio, republican and two democrats voted against him. The 149 affirmative votes were cast by republicans, greenbackers and readjusters.

A World of Good.

One of the most popular medicines now before the American public, is Hop Bitters. You see it everywhere. People take it with good effect. It builds them up. It is not as pleasant to the taste as some other Bitters, as it is not a whiskey drink. It is more like the old fashioned bone-set tea, that has done a world of good. If you don't feel just right try Hop Bitters. —Nunda News.

In the letter of Wm. C. Blackwood, published last week, a ludicrous error occurred in the proof reading. The amount per ton received for his grape crop was made to read $4,60 whereas it should have been $60. A slight difference. People who were posted in grape culture could readily see that it must be a mistake.

Mrs. McCurdy, of Fairgrove township, Tuscola county, missed her baby a few days ago, and looking into the well saw the child in the water. The well was not deep, and reaching down she rescued it, but it was so badly chilled that it died in a few minutes.

TECUMSEH has resolved to celebrate. The arrangements have been placed in good hands and people can rely upon a big time.

Bay City has again waked up to the importance of a railway to Midland, and a company has been organized, secured the franchises and stock of the old B. C. & M. R. R. Co., and new life has been infused into the scheme. Midland also takes hold of the project with avidity.

LET everybody make ready to attend the Sunday school convention next week.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

SPRINGVILLE.

The ice cream festival given by the Sons of Temperance, on Saturday eve. of last week may be counted a success although it was very cool for ice cream.

The Springville Cornet Band has made arrangements with five old band boys to play with them this season, which will make a full band of fourteen members.

Cultivating corn seems to be attracting the attention of most farmers this week, although sheep shearing will be commenced by a few.

Quite a number will attend the Sham Battle this week at Detroit.

J. Hand has commenced operation on the new school house and therefore has closed his brick yard at present.

Mrs. Pechtel is on the sick list.

"Competition is the life of trade" is the old saying, which is proving true even in the egg business.

Frank Stephenson after being confined to his bed about a week is able to get out again.

FRANKLIN.

Ed. Oliver has been obliged to leave college on account of ill health.

Mr. and Mrs. Fremont Learnard, of Allegan county, formerly of Franklin, are visiting friends here.

Orville Kemp, has been appointed highway commissioner vice Philip Pentecost resigned.

At the present writing Mrs. Jesse Pentecost is failing. It is thought she cannot live long.

The school at the Centre has again closed under unfavorable circumstances. This school is getting a reputation.

There will be no services at the M. E. church next Sunday owing to quarterly meeting being held at Springville.

Miss Jennie Swingle, of the college, took an active part in the teachers' meeting, and remained over Sabbath the guest of Miss Delia Kemp. They were formerly school mates in the Jonesville high school.

The pupils of Dist. No. 4, who have merited honorable mention for punctuality and good deportment from May 1 to June 3 are as follows: Chester Tomer, Ethel M., Mable and Lulu E. Love, Earl, Clarence and Eva Burtless, Blanche Crittenden, Claude Wheeler, Nellie May Smyth, Frank Pawson, Harry Ludwick, Herbert E. Boyd, Tina and Devello VanValkenburg, Nina May Pawson.

The teachers' meeting last Saturday at the Paragon school house was all that could be expected. There were over thirty present, a large per cent. of them teachers. The school room was beautifully and artistically festooned and decorated with evergreens, flowers, house plants, paintings and mottoes by the teacher in charge, Miss Sheffield. The drawings on the black board by Miss Edith Stout, showing the morphology of leaves was especially admired as was also the singing by a few of the pupils and by Misses Mary and Viola Sheffield, of Adrian township. The essay, "Wasted Energy," by Sadie E. Gamble, was well received. Prof. Walker made a few remarks and opened the "Question Box," which was well filled. The questions were then read and different ones named to lead in their discussion, which were full and complete. After the exercises Prof. Walker, by earnest request, rendered in his usual happy style a few choice selections.

RIDGEWAY.

Samuel Sharp is making his parents a short visit.

Rev. L. H. Dean, formerly on this charge, called on a few of his friends last week.

Children's day will be held here next Sunday. The church is to be appropriately decorated. The evening service will be an entertainment given by the Sabbath school.

Mrs. Dr. Loree has returned from a short visit to her parents in Clinton county.

It would be a great convenience to the readers of the HERALD if it contained the time card of our division of the Wabash.

The excursion rates to Detroit this week were taken advantage of by a large portion of the people in this locality.

Next week the date of the organ concert can be given positively. Those who have subscribed for the purchase of the organ should be prepared to meet at least a part of their pledges and all of it possibly by the 24th.

Addison Coryell, of Ypsilanti, is with his mother this week. On their way to church Sunday morning their horse took fright, overturned the buggy throwing them out and injuring Mrs. Coryell quite seriously.

Mrs. Charlotte Sutton celebrated her seventieth birthday this week.

CLINTON.

Harry Root was in Clinton Sunday.

We are grieved to learn that John Hause is on the sick list suffering with a severe attack of acute neuralgia.

Dr. Tuttle and wife made a flying visit to Detroit on Tuesday of this week.

A good program was rendered at the Reform Club meeting last Monday evening and was the recipient of a merited large audience.

Miss Ella Bartlett and Della Sawyer contemplate a visit to York state soon.

The amateur dramatic club of Clinton are to put upon the stage the nautical drama "Turn of the Tide, or Wrecked in Port," at Town Hall, Saturday evening.

A gala day for Clinton was yesterday, at the event of the uniting in the matrimonial links of Mr. Chas. Rupp and Miss Ella, daugnter of Frank Kirchgessner, of this place. The ceremony took place at St. Dominick's church, with Father Wallace officiating, and the Manchester choir furnishing the singing. There were guests from Manchester, Tecumseh and many other places, and the church was filled to its utmost comfortable seating capacity.

E. G. Cook has returned from his western trip looking better.

A fine oil painting of the veteran pioneer, John P. Silvers, has been placed in the window of D. H. Silver's clothing house. I believe it is the work of C. H. Hopkins, of Tecumseh.

C. H. Smith, of Tecumseh, has been doing the finishing work for A. G. Burton, and has just completed the painting of a fine wagon that is to go to Chicago.

VanAntwerp, the Tecumseh creamist, was in town Tuesday.

James Halladay had his collar bone broken by being kicked by a horse on Wednesday last.

LETTER FROM NEW MEXICO.

From the date of my last letter until the 6th of May we lay in camp about half a mile east of Fairview, just at the mouth of a twenty mile canyon, through which the line has been located. Down this canyon flows the Cuchillo creek for eleven months in the year. Only a few rods west of camp the water begins to ooze from the ground, and continues to do so along the bank for ten or twelve rods, forming a fair sized brook.—A small hole dug in the bank makes a cool spring of water for our use.

Above this the creek bottom is perfectly dry for eight miles, where at the mouth of another canyon the water again flows along the surface. Cottonwood trees and willow bushes are found along the stream, and wherever the former are seen water is sure to be found. The theory of this disappearing and again appearing of a stream is that wherever the underlying rock comes to the surface the water flows out over it, but where the rock sinks the stream sinks with it till it again comes to the surface. Let us climb a hill close to our camp on the south and view from a higher elevation the surrounding country. Looking down the canyon, to the east, we see the perpendicular walls of black volcanic rock, and on either side hills rising many hundred feet above the one on which we stand. To the west the scenery is more varied and grand; its main feature however being the snow capped peaks of the Black Range standing out in bold relief against the western sky. At our left we look down on the camp, and just across the creek on the opposite hill are seen the ruins of an ancient Aztec village.—Since my last letter "the boys" and I have dug up a number of relics from these ruins, such as rude axes, whetstones, stones for grinding grain, and a great many fragments of pottery, which showed that this people was skilled in the art of making and ornamenting earthenware. We also found many pieces of bones, some of which were split lengthwise, probably for the purpose of getting out the marrow. I was fortunate enough to secure a flat stone 20 inches long, 15 wide and 2 inches thick which had evidently been used for grinding corn. I also found a smaller stone, circular, but flat on both sides which had probably been used as an upper mill stone.

Having taken a general view of the country before us, let us note more particularly the details of the landscape. Near where the creek begins, three Mexicans have been making "dobe" brick for some weeks. By damming the stream the water is conducted into a hole dug in the ground a short distance from the bank. An old Mexican, bare-footed and bare-legged, is in the hole with hoe in hand and by a combined movement of hoe and feet thoroughly mixes dirt and water together. His two assistants have boxes about a foot long, six inches wide and 4 inches deep, which they fill with the mud, using only their hands. The mud thus moulded they dump out on the ground to dry. They do not seem to be working very hard and as far as my observation goes the average Mexican is not an energetic man. His main object being, apparently, to take life easy and to do as little as possible in the greatest possible time.

Near Fairview some white people are making brick of the usual size in the usual way. At present the buildings in Fairview are nearly all "dobe" though there are a few log houses,—Three stores (in all of which bad whiskey may be had), two corrals or yards containing edibles for the accommodation of teams, a few miners' huts and tents, together with some unfinished and unoccupied buildings constitute the town—a dull place indeed.

The stage comes out from three times a week and the mail twice. A few days ago Mr. Wells and myself saddled two mules and rode over to a mine called the "Ham Steak," in the Cuchillo Range—not far horizontally from the road, but nearly a thousand feet above it on the side of the mountain. We rode up to it on our mules, and after spending a little time there and getting a few specimens of ore we rode on around the steep side of the mountain, and came down on what is called the "Mesa," and which from its peculiar form deserves notice. It can be seen from a good distance and its peculiar shape makes it a noted land mark. It is nearly a mile long, about six hundred feet high, and from three hundred to four hundred feet wide on top, and perfectly flat.—One could lay out a good sized farm on its top, yet from a distance it looks scarcely wide enough to walk on. The sides and end slightly concave slope down to the small hills below. From this point it reminds one of the hull of a huge ship turned up to dry. At the end where it projects from the mountain it makes a great curve, then extends out perfectly straight. At the other end it rounds off nicely and drops down perpendicularly about ten feet before the slope begins. On the top near this end are the ruins of a wall built across it, and the story is that the Indians once used this as a fort. The surface of this Mesa is thickly covered with black volcanic boulders. We rode its whole length, and though a strong wind was blowing we greatly enjoyed the ride.

On the 6th of May we moved our camp to a lovely place on a mountain stream surrounded by pine covered hills, and not more than four miles from the summit of the "back-bone" of the continent—"the continental divide." Since we began the preliminary line, two weeks ago, we had been getting higher and higher up in the world, at the rate of about two feet for each hundred of advance, until on the evening of the 18th of May we reached the summit of the divide and I beheld for the first time the Pacific slope. I thought I had looked upon some grand scenery before that time but I have seen nothing else that can equal the grandeur of the view from the summit. We were nearly eight thousand feet above sea level, and the moisture which the peaks gather from the passing clouds has made the hills capable of supporting heavy forests of pine which showed in pleasing contrast with the treeless regions which we had left below us.

For some miles we run the line through a magnificent forest, and at noon would eat our dinners underneath some stately tree. There is no underbrush in these forests and the trees stand far enough apart to allow us to drive a wagon almost anywhere among them. The grass of last year's growth looked at a distance like that on a lawn. There is an abundance of game in this region, such as antelope, deer, turkeys, coyotes, &c. One day we surprised some young coyotes asleep in the sun near their burrow.—Before we could shoot them they awoke and ran into the hole, but the boys dug down and captured four which they took to camp and are trying to tame. They sometimes get restless and bark at night, but on the whole they are not much more trouble than so many puppies.

Our last move of camp was to Ojo Caliente. This post is located at the mouth of a deep, narrow canyon, down which flows a lively stream the year around. The canyon is so very narrow that the stream covers the bottom from wall to wall, so that one cannot go along on foot. The walls are very high, and in the crevices birds build their nests and cactuses grow and bloom. There are so many strange and beautiful flowers here that I often sit down and pull them to pieces to see how they are made.

We shall soon be through our work here, then must return to Engle, ninety miles away, and there await further orders. Should we meet with no mishap we hope to reach Engle by the 10th of June, after which time you may hear from me again.

F. MORLEY.

Mr. R. J. Sherwin, of Concord, N. H., writes: "I have a good old aunt, who keeps house for wife and baby and me. Of late she has been groaning and complaining. Our family doctor could not find out what ailed her, and yet often she would keep her bed for several days. I persuaded her to try Brown's Iron Bitters, and to my astonishment she has never complained since. She now calls it her medicine, and recommends it to everybody."

THERE will be lots of fun in Tecumseh on the Fourth of July.

The Courtier's Reply.

Sat with his courtiers in his windy hall.
The oak logs blazed, and shafts of ruddy light
Wavered like moving spears along the wall.

The tempest wandered in his robe of rain,
Or, rushing with a clamor from afar,
Roared through the castle, and was gone again.

The monarch and his bearded courtiers sat
All silent round the fire, with downcast eye.
No sound within was heard, save when a rat
Scampered across the floor, with dismal cry.

But suddenly a bird, wet-winged and bright,
Flashed over them, and vanished as it came.
Out of the night, it vanished into night.
As brief and beautiful as a falling flame.

"Such," said the king, "seem to this life of ours,—
A moment's passage through a lighted room!
One taste of this sweet breath,—then death devours
Life's transient day in its eternal gloom."

An aged courtier hastened to respond:
—James Buckham in Lippincott's Mag.

AN OLD STORY.

Truly an old story, the oldest story of the oldest literature of the race, a story told one to another by brown men in the shadow of rock-hewn temples centuries before the patriarch bade his sons get them down to Egypt to buy corn. For thousands of years the mystic figures of the papyri which preserved it were unread and unreadable. Patient antiquaries have at length deciphered them, and we can now relate again this first recorded work of fiction of our race.

Students of such ancient lore call it "The Tale of the Two Brothers," and in the learned volumes of Maspero and Brugsch those who wish an exact rendering can find it; for our purpose a free abridgment is enough. The form is old and odd, but the plot is not outworn, and on many names and nations has it been repeated. The faithlessness of woman and the weakness of man still make up the leading articles in many a novelist's stock in trade and in many an ower true tale. But to the story.

Anûbu and Bitau (Bi-ta-u) were sons of one father and mother, and loved each other as brothers should. Anûbu was the elder. He was married and owned fields which Bitau plowed, barns which Bitau filled, cows which Bitau milked. In all the land there was no more industrious nor more cheerful laborer than Bitau.

One day the brothers were sowing a field, and Bitau went to the house for seven measures of wheat and three measures of barley. The wife of Anûbu meted out the grain and saw that Bitau was strong-limbed and well-favored. Therefore she said to him:

"Come, let us take our pleasure."

But Bitau answered:

"Art thou not to me as a mother, and is not my brother to me as a father? But of this thou hast said never shall I speak a word."

But the woman did not trust Bitau, and therefore at even when her lord came home she cast herself on the ground and cried:

"My husband, I can no longer stand in honor before thee because of Bitau."

Deep anger filled the soul of Anûbu, and he took a keen-edged knife and went to the barn where Bitau was milking, and stood behind the door, minded to slay him when he should come forth. But the cow said to Bitau:

Then Bitau sprang forth suddenly and ran swiftly to escape. Anûbu pursued, and was gaining fast in the race when Bitau called to the god Pira, saying:

Straightway Pira caused a rapid river to flow between the two brothers, and they stood one on either bank of it. Then Bitau called out:

"My brother, my brother, why lie in wait to kill me? Why seek to slab me in my innocence?" And he declared to Anûbu all his wife's perfidy, and to prove his words he took a sharp knife and cut flesh from his body and cast it into the river. Then he added:

"Not any more may I live with thee, my brother. I go hence to the Vale of Cedars, and I shall by magic power place my heart on the top of a cedar, and until that cedar falls I shall live. When a servant brings thee a pot of beer and it boils in thy hand, then know that I am dead, and come and seek my heart and cast it into a vase of fresh water, and I shall live again."

When Anûbu heard this he fell into great grief, and cast dust upon his head, and returning to his house he killed his wife, and cut her into pieces and cast them to the dogs.

Bitau lived alone in the Vale of Cedars until the god Pira pitied his loneliness and made for him a woman passing all women in loveliness, perfect in her members, holding in herself the essence of the gods. But the seven Hathors came to look upon her, and said: "She shall die a violent death."

To her Bitau opened all his mind and told her of all things, even of his heart upon the cedar tree; and he said to her: "Go not nigh the great river (the Nile) lest it carry thee away from me."

One day she walked by the river and a lock of her hair fell into its waters. They carried it far down until it reached the land of Egypt, where the chief of the washer-men of Pharaoh picked it from the stream. As he held it, it spread a sweet fragrance through the air, and regarding it as some wonderful thing the chief of the washer-men took it to the great king. When Pharaoh scented the sweet odor his heart longed, and he summoned the magicians to declare whence came the lock. Then spake the magicians:

"Oh, Pharaoh, greatest of kings, to whom the world pays homage, this lock of hair comes from a daughter of Pira, perfect in her members, filled with the essence of the gods, who dwells in the Vale of Cedars. Let many strong men be sent to bring her."

Thus did Pharaoh, but Bitau slew all the host, one only escaping to tell the news. Then Pharaoh took counsel and sent other archers, but with them a woman bearing costly jewels and such toneries as women love. When the daughter of Pira saw these she sent no word to her husband, but came with the messenger to the house of Pharaoh. One day she said to him:

"Do this for me: Send and cut down the cedar I shall name."

It was that which bore her husband's heart, and Pharaoh sent his hewers and cut it down.

At that time a servant brought Anûbu a pot of beer, and it boiled in his hand. Straightway he left the house and journeyed to the Vale of Cedars in search of his brother's heart. For three years he searched, and at length he found the heart and placed it in a vase of water. Through divine force Bitau returned to life and said to his brother:

"I will take upon myself the form of a bull, and do about mount upon my back and let us go to where the great Pharaoh dwells. He will receive us with honors and with gifts of gold and precious stones."

Then [illegible] to the land of Egypt and Pharaoh received them with honor, and gave to Anûbu a fair house and lands and men servants, and Bitau the bull was led to the palace of Pharaoh. One day he entered the apartment of the women and stood before the favorite and said: "See, at length I came." She said: "Who art thou?" And he: "I am Bitau. Well thou knewest that I could not live after the cedar was cut down. And now I live indeed, but as a bull."

At these words the favorite had great fear and the next day she said to Pharaoh: "Swear by the god that thou wilt listen to my request." He swore. "Let me eat, she said, "of the liver of this bull." The king was sorrowful, but he had sworn and he sent an officer who slew the bull.

As they brought the liver two drops of blood fell from it at the foot of the steps of the palace, and from them grew in a night two persea trees, beautiful as none others in the land. This marvel was told Pharaoh and he came forth and sat under the shade of the persea, he under the one and the favorite under the other. Then the persea whispered to the favorite: "Faithless one, I live in spite of thee; though the cedar was cut down and the bull was slaughtered, I still am Bitau."

Afterwards the favorite spoke to Pharaoh, "Swear by the god that thou wilt listen to my request." The king swore and she said, "Give orders that these persea trees be cut down and hewn into planks." Pharaoh sent forth skilled workmen and they cut down the persea and hewed them into planks. As the favorite stood by to watch the hewing a chip of the wood flew into her mouth, and in due time it was said to Pharaoh, "A male child is borne." Then was there rejoicing through the land, nurses and wise women were summoned and Pharaoh named the child "the royal son of Cush (Ethiopia)." Acts of state were performed in his name, and when Pharaoh died the child came to inherit all the land. Forthwith he called together the counsellors and declared before them all his history—for the child was none other than Bitau—and said to them, "Judge me, as again this woman." The counsellors judged and that which they decreed was carried out. (The original has precisely this vagueness, plainly lest the impression made by the noble character of Bitau should be marred by a description of the punishment of his faithless and cruel spouse.)

For twenty years Bitau ruled over the land of Egypt and when he died his brother Anûbu ruled in his stead.

"This has written the scribe Ennatu, master of books, and whosoever shall speak of this book may the gods be his friend."

A Tale of a Shirt.

Apropos of General Sherman's visit to Denver, a story is told of the General's experience with Henry Clay Dean. The two had been friends for years, and when Sherman became General, and Dean happened to be in Washington, the latter, naturally enough, felt a desire to renew the old acquaintance. So he called at Sherman's house, and the General received him with open arms. They talked over old times, and nothing would do but Dean must stay to dinner. "But, General," remonstrated Mrs. Sherman, in her husband's ear, "I can't have such a dirty-looking man at my table; can't you spruce him up a little?" The General said he'd fix that, and so at an opportune moment he bustled Mr. Dean upstairs, ransacked a bureau, and produced a clean shirt for him to put on. Mrs. Sherman was mollified, and the dinner was really a charming affair, for there is no more delightful, entertaining and instructive conversationalist than Henry Clay Dean. One year after this event, General Sherman was at the Lindell Hotel, St. Louis, with his family. A card was brought up bearing Henry Clay Dean's name. Mrs. Sherman was very much pleased. "He is such a charming talker, we must have him to dinner. Only, you must see that he looks presentable." These were madam's words to the warrior. So Sherman welcomed Dean, and, just before going to dinner, slipped him into a side-room and gave him a clean shirt to wear. Dean doffed his coat and vest, and, after a brief struggle, divested himself of the shirt he had on—a soiled, grimy, black thing that looked as if it had seen long and hard service. Then they all went down to dinner, and Mr. Dean was more charming than ever, and Mrs. Sherman was in ecstacies. The next day, as Mrs. Sherman was getting her husband's duds and clothes together, preparatory to packing them for the onward march, she gave a sort of a wild, hunted scream. "What is it, my dear?" called the General from the next room. "Just come in here for a minute," replied Mrs. Sherman, between faint gasps. The General went in. There stood Mrs. Sherman holding in her left hand the begrimmed shirt Henry Clay Dean had left. With her right hand she pointed to certain initials on the lower edge of the bosom. The initials read "W. T. S." It was the identical shirt General Sherman had loaned Henry Clay Dean in Washington twelve months before.—Denver (Col.) Tribune.

It is quite common for a boy to misbehave when people are looking at him, for the mere fun of shocking them. But a man is not a boy. He knows better, and acts badly only when people are not looking.

Industrial Brevities.

Weiski and other investigators have very recently published an account of some experiments on sheep-feeding, instituted with the main object of ascertaining the difference in the assimilation with increasing age of the various mineral (or ash) constituents of fodder. Two lambs of about 4 months old were fed on meadow hay and split peas until they were 2 years old. It was found that the lambs assimilated during the first year a fairly constant amount of the constituents of common salt, chlorine and sodium, but a gradually increasing amount of bone-forming substances—viz., phosphoric acid, lime, and magnesia, while potash was assimilated in proportion to the growth of wool. At the age of 2 years an extremely small amount of these substances was required, of which potash still predominated. The absorption of phosphoric acid and lime had almost ceased, whence it may be assumed that at 2 years the bones are fully developed.

F. Mitschki Collandi, a German agriculturist, has been writing on the subject of the relation of the wool to the body-weight in Merino sheep. According to some breeders the larger varieties of merino are to be preferred on account of their yielding a better return both in flesh and wool for the fodder consumed. Our authority, however, after twenty five years' experience, declares the reverse to be the case, as the build of the sheep has a greater influence on the fattening properties than the absolute size, and larger quantities of wool are obtained from small sheep in relation to a given weight than in the larger kinds, the relative increase amounting to from 20 to 30 per cent.

Many farmers throw away the old brine in beef and pork barrels and fish packages. Sometimes they throw it on a grass patch, or under a tree, and kill the vegetation. If they desire to kill vegetation with it, they should pour it on in patches of burdocks or thistles, or around trees that are worthless. It is better, however, to use it for manure, in which case it should be applied with judgment. It may be applied to asparagus beds or quince trees liberally, but to other things sparingly. Ordinarily the best disposition to make of it is to pour it on a manure or compost heap, and allow it to be absorbed.

The cultivation of broom-corn is being tried with great success on many farms in California, the crop being very productive and commanding a high market price, as the following facts and figures show: An acre of land will yield one-half ton of corn and a ton of seed. The former commands from $40 to $100 per ton, and the seed sells at from $15 to $25 per ton. When harvested and ready for market the cost per acre rarely exceeds $25, and never goes above $30.

The area planted with tea in Assam in 1880-81 was 153,657 acres; the export of tea to Bengal was 37,715,000 pounds; and the total number of estates is 1,055. The Assamese is said to be remarkable for a total want of enterprise and energy; he desires only sufficient to enable him to purchase his daily rice and modicum of opium.

A paragraph is going the round to the effect that a Venetian glass manufacturer is producing glass bonnets by the thousand, and selling them, too. It is said that the glass cloth or thread of which they are made is shinier than silk, has a finer color, and is none the worse for a heavy shower of rain.

There is a good time coming for the long wool raisers, and the indications are it is not far off. The decrease in the number of the sheep in England, as shown by the agricultural returns, is enormous. Since 1868 the number has fallen off 5,548,000, being more than one-fourth of the whole.

A use has at last been found for the Canada thistle. A shepherd in South Australia declares that they furnish more and better food for sheep during a protracted drought than any plant that grows. The flower buds are eaten by lambs in preference to any kind of grass.

A fish-raiser of experience recommends digging ponds on the north side of bluffs, so that the water will be cooler and better shaded.

Last Words.

"I bless the Lord," said Sir Harry Vane, before his execution on Tower Hill, "that I have not deserted the righteous cause for which I suffer."

When Sir Walter Raleigh was laid on the block, he was told by the executioner to lie with his head toward the east. "No matter how the head lies," was his reply, "so that the heart be right."

Once when a great marshal was about to die, those about his bedside spoke to him of his victories, and the number of colors which he had taken from the enemy.

"Ah," said the old warrior, "how little avail all the actions which you call glorious! All these are not worth one single cup of cold water given for the love of God."

"My dear," said Sir Walter Scott to his son, on his death-bed, "be a good man; be virtuous, be religious, be a good man. Nothing else can give you comfort when you come to lie here."

"Live well!" said the dying Samuel Johnson.

Mahmoud, the Ghiznevide, the first Mohammedan conqueror of India, when he felt himself dying, caused all his treasures of gold and jewels to be displayed before him. When he surveyed them, he wept like a child.

"Alas," said he, "what dangers, what fatigues of body and mind, have I endured for the sake of acquiring those treasures, and what cares in preserving them! And now I am about to die and leave them!"

Thus the poor Manchester manufacturer, who had accumulated an immense fortune, had a pile of new sovereigns brought to him and laid upon the coverlet of his bed.

He gloated over and fondled them, feasted his eyes upon them, filled his hands with them, and let them fall in a stream upon each other, thus making music in his ear. When he died he was no richer than the beggar at his door.

Don Carlos, the would-be king of Spain, and his wife have parted. The cause of the disagreement is not given, but the neighbors say she used the royal scepter to stir soap with, and set a hen on fourteen duck-eggs in his kingly crown.

Grasshoppers as Food.

In the Sierra and Martis valleys Indian huts can be seen, and in and around them are congregated the warriors and squaws of the tribe, their sisters, cousins and their aunts, all intent upon the accomplishment of the grand result. As usual, the squaws do the work while the noble lords loll upon the green sward, smoke their pipes and dreamily and lazily gaze upon the countless myriads of buzzing hoppers that fill the air and devour the vegetation. The squaws, carrying queer cone-shaped baskets of great capacity, scoop the grasshoppers with a fan-shaped implement into their large baskets, and when loaded carry the wiggling mass of insects to camp and then prepare them for food. The grasshoppers, killed and subsequently dried, are mixed with mashed pine nuts and cracked wheat, and make into bread, most delicious to the palate of the Washoe. Visitors at the camp are always invited, in accordance with Indian hospitality to partake of the compound, and great is the astonishment of those to whom the dish is presented by the white man for food of this kind. To the limited mind of the Indian, it is incomprehensible that any one should reject food which in his vernacular is defined as being 'muchee good.'

Humbugged Again.

I saw so much said about the merits of Hop Bitters, and my wife who was always doctoring, and never well, teased me so urgently to get her some, I concluded to be humbugged again; and am glad I did, for in less than two months' use of the Bitters, my wife was cured, and she has remained so for eighteen months since. I like such humbugging.—H. T., St. Paul.—Pioneer Press.

THE UNDERGROUND WORLD OF ENGLAND.—The proposed tunnel between England and France under the Channel has suggested the preparation of some interesting statistics in regard to what may be called the underground world of England. According to these figures the number of persons employed in English mines, many of whom live in them constantly, is more than three hundred and seventy thousand; in other words, there are men, women and children below the British soil sufficient to form one of the largest cities of second rank. The length of tunnelling in which they labor is set down at the extraordinary figure of nearly fifty-nine thousand miles. The deepest gallery is at the level of twenty-eight hundred feet. These facts and figures are adduced in the support of the practicability of constructing and operating the Channel tunnel. The depth of the Channel, it seems, is nowhere more than one hundred and eighty feet, and taking this as a basis it is estimated that the lowest part of the tunnel would not be more than two hundred feet from the surface. If the engineer's figures and theories be correct the project is not only practicable but simple.—N. Y. Herald.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

Books.

It is chiefly through books that we enjoy intercourse with superior minds, and these invaluable means of communication are within the reach of all. In the best books men talk to us, give us their most precious thoughts and pour their soul into ours.

God be thanked for books. They are voices of the distant and the dead, and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages.

Books are the true levelers. They give to all who will faithfully use them, the society, the spiritual presence of the best and the greatest of our race. No matter how poor I am—no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter my obscure dwelling, if the sacred writers will enter and take up their abode under my roof, if Milton will cross my threshold and sing to me of Paradise, and Shakspere will open to me the world of imagination and the workings of the human heart, and Franklin enrich me with his practical wisdom, I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship, and I may become a cultivated man though excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live.—[Channing.

STONES IN THE KIDNEYS
And Bladder Expelled—Long Suffering of one of Troy's Best People—A Lucky Man.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

DEAR SIR:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year and this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, I tried it in my case and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder of an oval shape, 5-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly,
James Andrews.

No. 10 Marshall St., Mt. Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service, for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Wholesome Food.

The earliest agitator in the matter, says a writer in the Nineteenth Century, observed when traveling in Sicily, that the laboring classes there live healthily and work well upon a vegetable diet, the staple article of which bread is made of well-ground wheat meal. Nor are the Sicilians by any means the only people so supported. "The Hindoos of the Northwestern Provinces can walk fifty or sixty miles a day with no other food than 'chapatties,' made of the whole meal, with a little 'ghee,' or Gahum butter." Turkish and Arab porters capable of carrying burdens of from 400 to 600 pounds, live on bread only, with the occasional addition of fruit and vegetables. The Spartans and Romans of the old time lived their vigorous lives on bread made of wheaten meal. In Northern, as well as Southern climates, we find the same thing. In Russia, Sweden, Scotland, and elsewhere, the poor live chiefly on bread, always made from some whole meal—wheat, oats, or rye—and the peasantry, of whatever climate, so fed, always compare favorably with our South English poor, who, in conditions of indigence precluding them from obtaining sufficient meat food, starve, if not to death, at least into sickliness, on the white bread it is our modern English habit to prefer. White bread alone will not support animal life. Bread made of whole grain will. The experiment has been tried in France by Magendie. Dogs were the subjects of the trial, and every care was taken to equalize all the conditions—to proportion the quantity of food given in each case to the weight of the animal experimented upon, and so forth. The result was sufficiently marked. At the end of forty days the dogs fed soley on white bread died. The dogs fed on bread made of the whole grain remained vigorous, healthy and well nourished. Whether an originally healthy human being, if fed solely on white bread for forty days, would likewise die at the end of that time, remains, of course a question. The tenacity of life exhibited by Magendie's dogs will not evidently bear comparison with that of the scarcely yet forgotten forty days wonder—Dr. Tanner. Nor is it by any means asserted that any given man or any given child would certainly remain in vigorous health for an indefinite length of time if fed solely on wheat-meal bread. Not a single piece of strong evidence has been produced, however, to show that he would not; and in the only case in which whole-meal bread has been tried with any persistency or on any considerable scale among us—to wit, in jails—facts do show such bread to be an excellent and wholesome substitute for more costly forms of nutritious food.

The Care of the Hands.

Many persons, especially farmers, neglect their hands. Hard work will, of course, make the hands hard, but they need not on that account be untidy. A black line at each finger nail is not a mark of a "workingman" so much as it is of a negligent one. No matter what his occupation, one should no more come to the table with dirty hands than with dirty face. To keep the hands in good order a brush is a necessity. A "nail-brush" may be bought for a very small sum, and, no matter what may be one's work, he can, by use of this, keep his hands in very good condition. Rub the brush across the soap and scrub the finger nails, not only at the end, but at the base where they join the flesh, and, if there are any other parts of the hands that need it, give them a scrubbing also. The daily use of a nail-brush, and careful paring of the nails before they get long, will enable the hardest-worked farmer to keep his hands in a comfortable condition. The greatest trouble with the hands is from a splitting of the skin at the base of the nails, causing what are called "hang-nails;" this may be avoided by a little care. At each washing of the hands, and after they have been dried upon the towel, push the skin downward away from the base of the nail by using the end of another nail; that is, use the thumb-nail of the right hand to dress the nails of the left, and vice versa. The comfort that results from well-kept hands is sufficient reason, not to mention neat appearance, for properly caring for them.—American Agriculturist.

An Impossibility.

Whalebone once brought a very high price, especially when hoop-skirts were more in fashion than they are to-day. The Dutch formerly paid $3,500 for a ton of whalebone, but since 1763 it has never brought anything like that price. In 1818 it brought $450 a ton, in 1834 from $530 to $545; and in 1844 it varied from $1,030 for southern to $1,550 for northern bone. As the whale becomes scarce, of course whalebone will rise in the market, and at present the Dutch and the Scotch whalers are doing a very poor business. The Americans also complain, and now that this is the case, the inventive genius of man is trying hard to find a substitute for whalebone, and so far thy have met with some success. Buffalo horn has given great satisfaction, and there is quite a similarity between the two substances. The horns, after undergoing a special process, are cut into strips which are compressed and straightened and rendered suitable for any purpose by the dressmaker. Compressed cane has also been resorted to as a substitute for whalebone, but does not answer the purpose as well as buffalo horn. In France whalebone is 15 francs the kilogram; that if to say, it has tripled in price during the last quarter of a century. In 1853 the quantity of bone brought into the United States was 6,652,300 pounds; in 1873 it was 190,000 pounds; in 1880, 400,000 pounds. In 1853 whalebone was worth 35 cents a pound; in 1876, $2.50; and at the present time it is said to be selling at $2 per pound. In 1857, 143 vessels comprised the Greenland fleet, and in 1877 only sixteen were sent out. It will be observed that the business varies considerably from time to time, and it seems pretty certain that the best days of whaling are over for the present. It is said that nearly one-half of our whalebone is exported to France and Germany. There is no doubt that there is more whalebone consumed in Paris than in any other city in the world, for Paris carries off the palm in the manufacture of parasols and articles in the making of which whalebone forms a very material part. Then there are walking sticks and riding and driving whips, canes, corset bones, corset clasps, busks, hat bone, suspender bone, fishing rods and tips, landing rods for nets, drill bones, ferules, splints, probangs, paper cutters and folders, graining combs, boot shanks, shoe horns, policemen's loaded clubs, that require whalebone in their composition.

The best whalebone is obtained from the Greenland whale. From the mouth of one of those monsters from 2,000 to 3,000 pounds are often taken. The manufacture of whalebone into articles of use and ornament is not so extensive as one might imagine. It is principally confined to New York and Boston, four manufactories being in the former and three in the latter. When the raw whalebone is first received at the factory the hair is cut off in slabs. They are then soaked in water until they are soft, after which they are scraped of all the gum that adheres to them. They are next put in a steam-box, where a workman straightens them with a knife; they are finally polished, and are then ready to be made use of for any purpose that the dresser may see fit. Whalebone is principally used, nowadays, in the manufacture of whips and corsets. Umbrella frames used to be made altogether of whalebone, but since its scarcity and high-price, steel is mostly used for this purpose. Whalebone hats and whalebone ribbon have just come into vogue. The former look very beautiful and are very comfortable on the head.—Boston Transcript.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JUNE 15, 1882.

THE Michigan Southern Association of Universalists at Manchester last week resulted in a large attendance and a very interesting meeting.

The third term Lansing movement does not seem to meet with favor among the majority of Republican newspapers. No third termer need apply.

Politics in New York are becoming more and more mixed. The Democrats are weakened by the Tammany defection, while the old stalwart and half-breed war is rending the Republican party in twain. It is impossible to judge of the outlook until after the State conventions shall be held.

The tariff commission has been named by President Arthur. The steel interest, the wool interest, sugar, pottery and pig iron have representatives upon it, but the people of the United States at large seem to have been ignored in making up the commission. It was a farce in its inception and is likely to terminate in a farce. Two of the appointees have already declined. If two or three more would decline the President may yet have the opportunity of moulding it into a respectable body.

This is preeminently an age of advertising. Successful business men owe their prosperity to a judicious and continuous system of advertising.—Some adopt one plan and some another but all have some method of keeping themselves and the nature of the wares they have to sell before the public. An exchange, in giving its patrons a little advice on this subject, says:

No one questions that of all modes of advertising that through newspapers is the surest and best. The most successful of theatrical managers, who, in an experience of a number of years, has tried almost every variety of advertising, gives it as the result of his experience that judicious advertisements in the newspapers pay immeasurably better than any other.

The labor strikes are multiplying and the situation is becoming more ominous. The laborers have not only stopped work, but in many places they seem to be organizing for a determined resistance. What is the cause of this outbreak? Politicians tell us that the country was never more prosperous than now; the high tariff, which is such a boon to the laboring man, is still in existence; the country has been blessed with two bountiful harvests, with a third in prospect, and factories of all kinds are driven to their utmost capacity.—Is our excessive taxation wise? Is the tariff constituted for the best interests of the people? Is the political spoils system a beneficent one? Let the people investigate these matters and they can very easily solve the labor problem.

Among the distinguished men whom the University of Michigan has trained up to usefulness, and who have in turn shed lustre upon that model institution of learning, no one stands higher in the list than our former townsman Judge Thomas M. Cooley. Prof. Dillon having lately resigned the professorship in the Columbia College Law School, the New York Sun in commenting upon the fact says:

That the Law School loses a valuable member of its faculty in Judge Dillon will be the opinion of every one who knows anything about legal education in the United States. With the single exception of the University of Michigan, no other institution counts so distinguished a lawyer among its professors.

This exception indicates where Columbia College should look for the man to put in Judge Dillon's place.—In Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of that State and one of the ablest jurists in the United States, the trustees of Columbia College will find a really great teacher of the law.

By age, acquirements, and experience, he would seem to be peculiarly fitted for the position. He was born in 1824, and therefore is not too old.—He is universally recognized as a lawyer of the first rank. He is practically conversant with the work of instruction in the Law School of the University at Ann Arbor. His writings are found in every law library. Notable among these is his treatise on constitutional limitations, a book which ought to be studied in every college, not only by law students, but as a necessary part of the education of an American citizen. He is also the author of works on taxation and torts, and the editor of an excellent edition of Blackstone.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

EIGHTH WEEK.

The summer will soon be here, sweet Ruth,
For the cirus of brighter bowers,
Are singing their way from the balmy South
To the land of opening flowers.
—JAMES G. CLARK.

He knew what's what, and that's as high as metaphysic wit can fly.—BUTLER'S HUDIBRAS.

Columbus always shaves himself immediately after breakfast on Sunday morning. On account of his mutilated toe, which seemed to paralyze the nerves of his right arm, he had Ellie shave him on the first day of the eighth week. Ellie had cleaned one side of his face in good style, having clipped the skin in only four places, when he accidentally let the razor drop down the sink pipe. There was no possible way to recover it without tearing up the kitchen floor and taking the lead pipe off the sink. As Ichabod was a very pious man, he could not think of desecrating the Sabbath by work of that character, and hence he postponed the last half of his shave until the next Sunday morning. This mishap ruffled his usually even temper considerably. Having blown up Ellie, kicked the dog out of the kitchen, shut the Captain in the woodshed and spanked the baby, he gave me some friendly advice with reference to the week's work. "Young man," said he, "I want to have a little plain talk with you this morning. Things is not movin' on this plantation the way they ought to. The work don't move along. Why, my dear sir, summer's comin'. Here it is the 22d of May, and no corn in yet; the pertaters is waitin' for the new moon; not a cabbage planted for sour-krout; only one hen set, and she got on the wrong nest the tenth day and let her eggs all get cold; the grass is growin to seed in the strawberry beds; the squash and watermelons still slumber in the seed box under the kitchen table; not a radish in the ground; no red root pulled in the wheat lot; not a stick of wood for the cook stove and everything else is runnin' behind. Now then, young man, there's got to be a change. I've been lettin' you boss things and I've done the work, but hereafter I shall be boss and let Ellie do the work. That's my forte. I know what's what about farmin' if I do say it myself. I can calkillate like a house afire. I've got a head piece like Socrates. In fact I've been mistaken for Socrates time and agin over'n Canada. My rheumatiz and other troubles sometimes incapacitates me from manual labor, but my brain is as clear as a Jersey cow's buttermilk, and as lively as pertater bugs in June. If you'll let me do the calkillatin', with a good stout boy like Ellie to do the work, we'll accomplish more labor than we could with three men and two boys under your management. This is frank talk, young man, but I believe in plain speech. When I've got anything to say, I say it. That's met every time. Of course I don't expect to dress up in broadcloth, set in the parlor, and give orders by telephone to the men in the back yard. I shall wear top boots and over-alls, take my meals reg'lar, milk the kickin' cow, and see that every man on the place tends right to his knittin'. I propose to try this plan till the first of July, and if it dont revolutionize this place, and make it bud and blossom like the sunflower, then you can set me down for a goslin', that's all."

Like the young man who kissed a colored girl in the dark by mistake, I had nothing to say. I was deeply impressed with Ichabod's learning and was fully satisfied that he knew what's what, and as a change of some sort seemed to be imperatively necessary, I concluded to let Columbus seize the paddle and propel the canoe himself for a few weeks. The first week under the new plan was an eventful one.

Monday, May 23d.—Columbus went to neighbor Hinchman's for seed corn. He then shelled the seed corn and rolled it in a solution of copperas, lampblack, vinegar and water. The copperas will keep off the cut-worm, the lampblack will drive away the crows, while the vinegar will make the corn grow one inch every night. As I could not find any of the steel-spring lock-stitch corn-planters in the market, I got two double and twisted back-action Buckeye planters which are highly recommended and retail at five dollars each. Ichabod sand-papered them up nicely ready for use. Ellie marked out the corn-ground preparatory to planting.

Tuesday, May 24th—Ellie planted corn with a planter all day. Hired Billy Boyd to help, and he planted all day. Columbus stirred the corn in a tub with a broom-stick and filled the planters for the boys at each round. They went through that field kiting. I doubt whether a field of corn was ever put in more expeditiously since Michigan was admitted into the Union as a State.

Wednesday, May 25th—Columbus plowed and dragged a half acre patch in the young orchard for small truck. He only broke two trace-chains and one plow-point. Ellie worked all day trimming the raspberry bushes.

Thursday, May 26th—Ellie rolled and dragged the truck patch. Ichabod got mill feed for the cows, washed the buggy and cleaned out the big water tank. As the plug could not be loosened from the outside to let the stagnant water escape, he reached over the top and attempted to drive it out with a crow-bar. As his hands with the crowbar added were heavier than his feet, he lost his equilibrium and pitched head first into the tank. The dog, Tiger, heard the fracas and plunged in to pull his master out. The Captain was on hand as usual, and as he always followed where Ichabod led the way, he went in for a swim too. By this time Ellie arrived on the scene of action, and by the aid of the women folks, a step-ladder and an old bed cord, the three swimmers were hauled out of the tank. Tiger shook himself and was ready for another dive. The Captain was so nearly gone up that he was glad to stretch himself out on the gravel pile to take a rest, Ichabod was speechless when pulled out, which was a very alarming symptom with him. Ellie doubled him up like a jack-knife, pounded him in the back, blew in his mouth and whistled in his ears, and finally brought him too. The clearing of the tank was deferred till some future time.

Friday, May 27th—Ellie marked out the truck patch. Columbus had the rheumatism to-day, occasioned by his bath yesterday.

Saturday, May 28th—Ellie cut potatoes, prepared some parsnip seed and finished marking rows in the truck patch. Columbus put a new handle on the draw shave, got his razor out of the sink pipe, cut the Captain's tail off and showed Ellie how to curry his horses for him.

The summer will soon be here, young man,—
The mosquito is humming around;
The katydid's piping his jolly refrain,
And the onion peeps out of the ground.
The sunflower at once must go in, young man,
The cabbage has got to be set;
The work of the farm must be cut out and planned
By an artist who knows what is what.

W. R. DINGMAN died at his residence in Lansing on Sunday, June 11, 1882, aged 69 years and 11 months. He leaves a loving wife, one son, two daughters and many friends, both here and at Lansing, to mourn his loss.

TRAMPS or burglars entered Cummins' carriage factory Thursday night last and stole such tools as are needed in doing work in the burglary line.—Being spoiled by night watchman Haynes they made a hasty departure by means of a stolen hand-car which they left at Chase's crossing. We wish no further acquaintance with the gang.

NELLIE CONKLIN, the eldest daughter of M. E. Conklin, met with a serious accident last Sunday. She fell headlong down the cellar stairs and struck upon her breast. She was picked up unconscious and remained so until Monday morning. It was feared at first that the injury might terminate fatally, but we are glad to learn that the prospects are now favorable for her recovery.

PREPARATIONS for our Fourth of July celebration are progressing finely. The Adrian K. T. band has been engaged, there will be a Bicycle race and a grand display of fireworks. Other attractions are being secured. At a meeting last Monday the officers were chosen and committees partly agreed upon. We shall be able next week to give our readers a program in full of the exercises with a complete list of the committees.

EVERYBODY is coming to Tecumseh to celebrate this year.

DR. E. H. COLLER, of Athens, Mich., made us a call Monday.

IT is reported that Tecumseh is soon to have a double wedding.

FRED ROSACRANS, our new postmaster, will take possession at an early day.

WHERE is the telephone office to be located? That now seems to be the question.

C. W. GOODRICH, of Coldwater, made his Tecumseh friends a short visit yesterday.

PUT up your screen doors. Hot weather and flies are promised us for July and August.

WE learn that Henry Holderman is very sick. He is reported some better this morning.

A. W. SLAYTON has shipped 40,000 feet of lumber, mostly to the west, during the past week.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will speak next Sabbath evening on "A personal devil and his influence."

DEACON O. S. STEVENS is spending a week with his son, Dept. Sheriff H. W. Stevens, of this village.

DAVID VANTINE is bound to be in fashion and has removed the fence in front of his Brownville residence.

WE understand that a foot bridge is to be built across the Raisin near the paper mill. A thing long needed.

DR. HOUSE has been making improvements in his office. A new carpet on the floor of the reception room.

IT is without doubt that Forepaugh has the largest show ever in the State. Do not fail to see it at Adrian to-morrow.

REV. V. GARRETT and wife, of Ridgeville, N. Y., are visiting Dr. and Mrs. I. S. Hamilton for a few days.

WE are pleased to welcome to the list of lady clerks Miss Bowerman, of Raisin, who has accepted a position with Gainsley & Co.

HENRY HEESEN has built on and repaired over his residence on Mill street and now has one of the prettiest places in that part of our village.

W. D. ROBBINS, of Cleveland, dropped in upon his Tecumseh friends very unexpectedly yesterday. He will spend a few days at his old home.

ONE of the barns belonging to Lute Bates was struck by lightning last Friday evening. Besides the knocking off of a few boards no other damage was done.

EGGS are very scarce and retail for twenty cents per dozen. They are all picked up by men who go from house to house in the country, and are shipped to eastern markets.

DELL WOOD'S new house on Shawnee street will soon be ready for occupancy. He will soon have as cozy and convenient house and barn as can be found in the village for the money.

ANSON TITUS and wife, of Clifton Springs, N.Y., and Mrs. Betsey Hungerford, of Appleton, Wis., have been the guests of C. C. Tefft during the past week. They went east yesterday.

THE appearance of a certain residence on Pottawatamie street early Friday morning caused a ripple of excitement for a few moments. A window found broken and stained with blood aroused suspicion in the minds of some that all was not right. Investigation proved that a dog had used the window as a means of exit.

THE S. S. CONVENTION.

PLEASANT WEATHER AND A LARGE ATTENDANCE AT THE MEETINGS.

Report of the Opening Session on Tuesday Evening and the Sessions of Wednesday and Thursday Morning.

The annual convention of the State Sunday School Association convened promptly on time last Tuesday evening at the opera house.

TUESDAY EVENING.

As President J. W. Ford was absent Rev. R. S. Pardington presided.

The exercises were opened by a choral service led by J. S. Strong.

Reading of scripture by Rev. Pardington.

Then followed the introductory address by Rev. C. E. Conley of Tecumseh.

The most important work of life is the building of character, and that man has the best character who approaches nearest to Christ. He was not simply pure but holy; He not only hated wrong but championed the right. The ideal of every man should be to live a life like Christ. In our teaching let us be faithful to our trust, always keeping in view the object—character building. We gather here on this occassion to consider our resources, and how we can use them to insure success. We represent 1300 ministers, 1600 schools and aoout 20,000 constituents. In the name of our common work, in the name of the municipality, beneath whose shelter our meeting is held, we welcome you.

In behalf of the delegates, I desire to express our thankfulness for the generous welcome given us. From a former visit here I understand the meaning of Tecumseh's hospitality. Why are we here? To learn concerning the things of the kingdom, and how to work therein. I hazard nothing in saying that each one of us needs a fresh experience and renewal in christian work. Let us put away self and fill the heart with prayer. Let us pray that the counsel here given may come from God, and then the influence of this meeting will find its way into every school in Michigan.

The Secretary, Rev. A. H. Gillett, next made a few business announcements, stating the character of the work thus far done, and what they hope to accomplish in the future.

A committee of three, to nominate officers for the ensuing year was then chosen, consisting of Mr. E. Couper of Ann Arbor, Hon. W. H. Boyd of Monroe, and Rev. R. W. French of Denton.

A telegram having been received from Mr. Jacobs, that he could not be present until Wednesday, Rev. Mr. Kirtley of Jackson, took his place on the program and gave his address which was set down for Wednesday afternoon. Subject, The Parents ought, before the Sunday School.

Parents consider their work done when their children have a Bible. They look to Sunday School teachers to instruct their children in God's word. This is unfortunate. Parents should give their own children instruction. Disobedience of the law gives pain and unhappiness. The scriptures enjoin us to instruct our children. God says, "Teach your children my words." This is one of the most prominent teachings of the Bible and it must not be disregarded. This instruction must be given while they are young. But we excuse ourselves with the words, "I have no time," "I am driven with business." Then ought we to become parents? Ought we to assume a duty we cannot do? Religious instruction should be given to children, for their nature craves it. Parents alone are responsible for the proper education and development of their children. The Sunday School is a powerful agency in forming christian character, but it cannot take the place of parental instruction.

Singing followed, and the exercises of the evening closed with the benediction by Rev. C. E. Conley.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The convention opened at 8:30 by reading of scripture, singing by the congregation and prayer by Rev. Judson Swift of White Pigeon.

A motion was made and carried that all persons present be considered delegates and allowed a vote on all questions.

Persons having statistics of counties were requested to hand the same to the Secretary.

It was moved and carried that Rev. Jacob Horton and D. W. Miller be appointed as an enrollment committee to take the name and post-office address of all delegates present.

Rev. Sackett of Monroe gave a report for his county. They have been at work in Monroe Co. for three years, and have a good organization, with a vice president in every town.

Pres. McKeever reported that Allegan Co. was not organized.

Mrs. Marshall reported for Branch Co. A convention was held and an organization made but not much progress since.

Mr. Parsons reported from Berrien. This county is well organized, has had three conventions and the work is progressing finely.

Dr. North reported for Lenawee. An organization was started in Tecumseh about two months ago. We expect to organize fully before the next meeting which will be held at Hudson on the 29th and 30th of August.

Mr. Phelps reported for Calhoun Co. No organization here, but we are doing good work in Sunday Schools ourselves.

Gratiot Co. reported by Silas Moody. Has a good organization and several meetings have been held.

Hillsdale Co. reported by Mrs. Shaddock. This county is alive, awake, progressing. The last convention held at Reading had 250 delegates present.

Mr. Lawrence reported for Ingham Co. He was not acquainted with the county work, but the mission work in Lansing was doing finely.

Kalamazoo, reported by Rev. A. H. Gillett. This county is well organized It is the banner county, except Monroe.

Jackson, reported by Mr. Pilcher. A convention has been held and officers appointed.

Mr. Waldo reported a lack of work and interest in Kent Co.

Chas. Oldham gave a fine report from Shiawassee Co. This county is well organized and wide awake.

Mr. Beardsley reported from St. Joseph Co., that an organization was effected in April, but not much work has been done.

Van Buren Co., reported by Willis Halleck. No special report to make. He came here for instruction.

Mr. Haven reported for Wayne Co. encouragingly.

Singing by the congregation followed, and then Rev. J.W. Hough, D.D., gave an address upon "The Sunday School and its mission."

The Sunday School embodies the "Young America" idea of the present generation. It is regarded by many to be a more important religious work than the prayer meeting. In new settlements it has been the mother of churches, holding its sessions where the church is not able to support itself. It has called into existence vast conventions and park assemblys. It has steadily asserted its importance and made itself felt in church work. Devoting itself to the young, it reaches them at a period when its power is effectual. Home instruction is needful, but in unchristian homes the children would go untaught were it not for the public Sunday Schools. It is our duty to see that this grand machinery is kept in proper order. We have built it. The next step is to make it better. The Sunday School service should develop into a systematic course of reading and study of the Bible, and the idea that it is designed for children only should be repudiated. It should be for Bible study by both young and old.

B. F. Jacobs followed Dr. Hough with an interesting impromptu address. The convention then took a recess until afternoon.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Prayer by Rev. Beardsley.

SPRINGFIELD, O., June 13, '82.

DEAR BRETHREN—The Ohio Sunday School Convention send fraternal greeting and hearty wishes for your success. Read Philippians 4-8.

Signed by President and Com.

Mr. B. F. Jacobs then gave his address on the Value and Method of organization.

The question is asked "What is the use of organization?" An organization is a company of christian men and women who come together to look over the field, plan the work and do it. We are too liable to make plans and fail to execute them. It is high time we called every man and woman to the front and asked their aid. As we receive the blessings, let us reach out our hands to bless others and let Michigan do her share of the great work.

On motion Rev. Judson Swift was appointed Assistant Secretary.

A communication was read by the Secretary from the President of the Foreign S.S. Association and the same was referred to the Ex. Com.

Dr. J. H. Vincent then followed upon the topic, "Union and Denominational work."

We are not to regard churches as so many arbitrary societies for the debate of this subject. There is no damage in subdivision so long as charity is not set aside. I favor denominational work, organization and teaching. A spirit of charity is promoted by frank discussion. Nothing does so much to weaken infidelity as to have denominations differing in opinion, come together to discuss great religious questions.

Singing by the choir followed.

B. F. Jacobs made a few remarks on the relation the S.S. Association bears toward the International Convention. Michigan is pledged to raise $100 a year for three years. The first year expires this month. On motion the Ex. Com. was instructed to take this matter into consideration and report to-morrow morning.

On motion Mr. McLaughlin was appointed to see how many subscriptions can be obtained for a copy of the proceedings of this convention at 25 cts. each.

A recess was then taken until evening.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

In the evening Rev. Dr. Vincent delivered his lecture entitled "Among the Heights", to a well filled house. It was a grand effort, full of noble thoughts beautifully expressed. As no abstract of the lecture could do it justice, we withhold any synopsis of it.

THURSDAY MORNING.

The convention opened with the reading of Scripture and Prayer service led by Rev. M. D. Carrel.

Rev. J. A. Bartlett of Whitehall, reported the S. S. work in Muskegon county on the increase and characterized by great interest.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind. June 14.
Pres. Mich. S. S. Convention:
Indiana State S. S. Convention ready for work greets Michigan workers in convention. Yoke fellows for Christ. Read Titus, 3-15.

WM. S. LEVERING,

Colorado Springs, June 14, '82.
To the Mich. S. S. Convention:
The Colorado S. S. Convention in session sends greeting. First John 3d.

R. H. GILMORE, Pre's.

On motion, the Secretary was instructed to make reply to these telegrams.

Rev. Geo. C. Bush reported Washtenaw County without an organization.

H. LaMont reported for Mecosta County. It has no organization, but work to that end is progressing favorably.

"How to Promote Organization" was then taken up. The Ex. Com. offered a resolution that a county be considered fully organized when it has a county organization, holds annual conventions and has a vice-president in each township. That those counties shall be called "banner" in which every township is organized, and when an annual convention is held by each organization. Carried.

It was on motion decided that this convention use the International statistical blanks. This committee further reported that they were drafting a constitution and a sytematic plan of work.

It was resolved that conferences be held this fall in different parts of the state under the supervision of the state secretary. Mass meetings are also to be held in several of the principal towns and cities of the state for the purpose of stimulating general interest. The secretary presented the subject of the finances and a call was made for further pledges. In response to this call the following pledges were made: Berrien, Van Buren, Grand Traverse, Kent, Allegan, Monroe, Muskegon, Lenawee, St. Joseph, and Gratiot counties $10,00 each; Hillsdale, Kalamazoo, Jackson, and Washtenaw counties $15.00 each; City of Adrian and A. H. Gillet $10.00 each; Raisin, Deerfield, Adrian, Rollin, Tecumseh, Ridgeway, London townships $5.00 each; Mecosta Co., and Calhoun Co., $5.00 each; Mission school of Lansing $5.00. A collection was then taken up for the same purpose which amounted to $25.24.

A resolution was adopted expressing sympathy with the temperance reform and endorsing any and all efforts calculated to banish the traffic in intoxicating beverages.

The Ex. Com. submitted a report on the communication of A. Woodruff with reference to the "Foreign S. S. Association," expressing sympathy with the foreign work, but deeming it inexpedient to adopt the resolution proposed and sent to this Convention by him.

Adopted.

Then followed "The Mysteries of Christanity, are they any objection to it?" by Rev. Frank T. Bayley, of Detroit.

This topic is not strictly a Sunday School one. Skeptics hold that religion has too many mysteries, and herein is one great objection to christianity. Are mysteries an objection? There is an element of mystery about christianity. Paul discovered that fact but he was not staggered by it. Man requires a religion of some kind. If we reject christianity, what can take its place? Mystery exists in every religion and in every realm of thought.

Recess until afternoon. The balance of our report will appear next week.

Home Treatment of Colds.

A writer in a London journal gives the following practical suggestions on this subject, under the heading "Never Poultice for a Cold:"

I am induced to offer the following advice, having experienced the evils of poulticing throat or chest, more especially in the case of children. It is a too common practice for doctors, when called to a case, to recommend poultices; they are, however, bitterly paid for in the future. I have known several children who were poulticed, who suffered from croup each winter after until they attained their teens; and also grown-up people who so weakened throat and chest by injudicious poulticing that they were thereafter annual victims to complaints of the respiratory organs. To persons of weak chests I would recommend a small square, say a quarter of a sheet, of cotton wadding, worn over his chest in the winter months. Last winter but one, I had two children suffering from scarlet fever, one of them being badly affected in the throat. The doctor ordered poultices, but I demurred and stated my objections. He agreed with me in the main, and consented to allow a trial of my substitute, namely, a flannel soaked in salad oil wound around the throat, with a dry flannel on the top, to keep the oil from the clothes; the same application to the chest. The next morning he agreed that the remedy had been better than the poultice would have been. At that time the eruption of the skin was at its height, and occasioned the children much discomfort, so I asked the doctor's permission to rub the bodies with the oil. He agreed to this, provided I did the rubbing myself, or superintended it, for, said he, without care it might be fatal, with care it will have the best results. Having made up a good fire and fastened the bedroom door, to prevent the possibility of its being opened during the operation, I folded the children in a flannel wrapper, and gradually rubbed them from head to foot in salad oil. The effect was wonderful on the parched skin, and they both went peacefully to sleep. Next day they begged for a repetition of the oil rubbing, and I continued it until after the peeling process had been accomplished. As the doctor said, the benefits are great, and the only danger lies in the risk of taking cold. This with care can be reduced to the minimum. So with colds affecting throat or chest. A flannel soaked in either cold-drawn castor oil or salad oil, and worn round the throat and on the chest at night, will have a much more salutary effect than poultices, and will entail no bad after results. To persons who are subject to frequently getting wet, a rubbing of either of the above oils would be found salutary in keeping off colds, and when rubbed into the joint, in checking or alleviating rheumatism.

The Passion for Diamonds

"Are there more diamonds worn now than ever before in this country?"

"I should say so, most decidely. I have been in the business over thirty years, and I never knew such a rage for the stone as exists to-day. Recently I attended a garden party at the Grand Union hotel at Saratoga and I saw bushels of them. This is the only way to describe the number of valuable diamonds worn there, and most of them were fine stones. Nearly every woman there had big solitaires in rings or ear-rings. You see the finest diamonds are worn solitaire in studs, rings and earrings, while for bracelets and hair-pins an inferior stone may be used as they are not so conspicuous. I noticed one thing, however, at the Grand Union—nine-tenths of the diamonds were not clean. Dust settles on everything, and it is astonishing how little care a woman will give to her diamonds. They carefully inspect their gloves and shoes before completing their toilets, but their diamonds, worth often thousands of dollars, receive no attention, become dirty, and are sometimes lost. A lady customer of mine lost a very valuable diamond after possessing it years. If she had been in the habit of giving the gem any attention, she would have noticed that a setting of eighteen carat gold will wear out in time and lose its grip on the stone. The large solitaire diamond is now preferred to the cluster. Few diamonds are worn by gentlemen except in the case of young men anxious for display. Here and there a gentleman will wear solitaires on his shirt bosom, but if he has good taste he will be careful that they are small or he may be taken for a gambler. It is astonishing how much money is sometimes represented in the diamonds worn by ladies on a "swell" occasion. It is a common thing in New York society to see $10,000 or $20,000 in diamonds on a lady's person. Mrs. John Jacob Astor has been known to wear $50,000 worth of diamonds at an evening reception, and I should say that the diamonds worn by Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt at the garden party I spoke of were worth fully that amount of money. Mrs. Mackay, wife of the "Bonanza king," once offered to buy the famous "Dragent" diamond, the most valuable in the world. It is valued at a mere million, but the French government wouldn't sell it."—New York Tribune.

In a School in Germany.

We were of all ages, ranging from four or five to sixteen or seventeen years. The school was divided into three classes. The first class comprised fifty, the second forty, and the lowest thirty girls. We all met together at ten o'clock, for the quarter of an hour allotted to play. The school was kept by an old lady superintendent, under whose management were three other ladies—governesses. Two of them were French, the other German; but none of these took any part in the teaching; they remained in the different rooms for supervision only. Once a day at least, during some class, never at any fixed hour, the lady superintendent would herself come into each room, and inquire of the master how things were going on, and if any pupil was either careless or refractory, she was there and then reprimanded in presence of us all. I am afraid none of us cared very much for the old lady, one reason for our dislike being the fact of her having very long fingers, with which she was in the habit of tapping rather feelingly upon the shoulder of any one of us who might be stooping over or sitting carelessly at her desk. It was the rule of the school that each pupil should bring her desk with her. They were all regulation size, large enough to contain the books, paper, and other things which we might at any time require, and they were carefully locked in the evening, each girl taking her key away with her. We had a professor for every separate subject, and I must say they did their best to interest us in our work. The religious teaching in the school took up one hour every morning, a Lutheran minister and a Roman Catholic priest attending the pupils of the two denominations. There was a professor for history, another for geography, a third for arithmetic, a fourth for astronomy, a fifth for chemistry, a sixth for writing, a seventh for the German language only, two for French—the one for correction and conversation, the other for preparation—a master for drawing, and another for class-singing.

The Doctor's Secret.

Probably no new development will more surprise the public, than to learn the secret of success of leading physicians. When they have a difficult case of throat or lung disease that baffles their scientific skill, they prescribe Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, having it disguised in a prescription bottle, with their own directions and name attached. The patient is cured and they get the credit.—Tribune. Sold by all druggists.

Dampness and dew are fatal to young turkey. Therefore they should be kept in coops until the dew is off the grass. Great many young turkeys die from this cause, while breeders wrongly ascribe their death to improper food.

Too much land is the curse of many farms. One acre well cultivated and well fertilized, will yield more profit than four acres half cultivated and with the same fertilizer spread over it which should be applied to one acre.

A boy can imagine almost anything; he can lay an old shot gun about all day without firing at a living thing, and be under the impression that he is having a good time. But all attempts to induce a boy to imagine that he's killing Indians when he is sawing wood have proved futile.—Boston Post.

An English authority states that watercresses, cooked in the same way as cabbages or any other green vegetable, form a most acceptable dish. They come to the table very tender and of a dark-green color, and are nicer than spinach. Those who live near a running stream may have a never-ending supply of water-cresses, it being only necessary to scatter the seed along the banks.

How Easy it is to Die.

"If I had strength to hold a pen, I would write how easy and delightful it is to die," were the last words of the celebrated surgeon, Wm. Hunter; and Louis XVI. is recorded as saying with his last breath, "I thought dying had been more difficult."

That the painlessness of death is owing to some benumbing influence acting on the sensory nerves may be inferred from the fact that unpleasant external surroundings rarely trouble the dying.

On the day that Lord Collingwood breathed his last, the Mediterranean was tumultuous; those elements which had been the scene of his past glories rose and fell in swelling undulations and seemed as if rocking him to sleep. Capt. Thomas ventured to ask if he was disturbed by the tossing of the ship. "No, Thomas," he answered, "I am now in a state that nothing can disturb me more—I am dying, and I am sure it must be consolatory to you and all that love me to see how comfortably I am coming to my end." In the Quarterly Review there is related an instance of a criminal who escaped death from hanging by the breaking of the rope. Henry IV. of France sent his physician to examine him, who reported that after a moment's suffering the man saw an apparance like fire, across which appeared a most beautiful avenue of trees. When pardon was mentioned, the prisoner coolly replied that it was not worth asking for. Those who have been near death from drowning, and afterwards restored to consciousness, assert that the dying suffer but little pain.

Capt. Marryatt states that his sensations at one time when nearly drowned were rather pleasant than otherwise. "The first struggle for life once over, the water closing around me assumed the appearance of waving green fields. * * * It is not a feeling of pain, but seems like sinking down, overpowered by sleep, in the long soft grass of the cool meadow."

Now this is precisely the condition presented in death from disease. Insensibility comes on, the mind loses consciousness of external objects, and death rapidly and and placedly ensues from asphyxia.

Wonderful—The demand for Rinehart's Liver Pills. It beats all how they sell. Only one for a dose. Sample dose free, at Wright's.

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

George W. Simpson's Proposal.

"Do you dance?"

"No, I dropped on myself two seasons ago," was the response, in a strong, manly voice.

Veronica McGuire looked up at Geo. W. Simpson, an expression of wonder and surprise in her soft, velvety eyes.—Very beautiful was this girl, as she stood in the dim, half-light of the conservatory, the pearly flesh and rounded curves of her arms and shoulders seeming more than humanly beautiful, while the rose-laden air of the place seemed only fit to kiss the wine-red lips of so wonderfully fair a maiden.

"I am sorry you do not dance, Mr. Simpson," said Veronica, after a momentary pause, "because it is really the one thing in which I may truthfully lay claim to being proficient. As you have no doubt discovered before this, I am a wretched hand at conversation, an original idea never seeming to find birth in this empty head of mine.

George looked fondly down upon her bang. "I am afraid you are rather inclined to depreciate your own abilities," he said, throwing just a shade of tenderness into the rich tones of his pure voice. "You play nicely, and you certainly sing well."

"Only passably, my dear, Mr. Simpson," was the laughing reply, "you really must not flatter me too much, because I am vain enough already. But, by the way, have you heard 'Over the Garden Wall, yet?'"

"No," was the reply in tones that were tremulous with emotion, "I never heard the tune, but I have had occasion to go over the wall once or twice."

"It is a beautiful thing," said Veronica. "There is a weird sadness, and yet joy, about the music that carries one completely away. Do you not find it so oftentimes?"

"Yes," replied George, "it is pretty darn weird to get over a wall on a dark night and dive down into an alley that you don't know nothing about."

"You are just too funny!" exclaimed the girl, looking at him steadily. As she did so his eyes met hers, and the rich color flooded her cheeks, making them more radiantly beautiful than ever. Turning quickly, she stood with averted face and downcast eyes, and for a moment no word was spoken. Finally George stepped to Veronica's side and took the little hand that was toying with a rose into his broad palm. She did not start, or seek to withdraw it.

George held the dimpled prisoner for a moment and then raised it to his lips.

"Mr. Simpson!" exclaimed the girl, "you do not seem to know what you are doing. Remember, sir, that——"

"Oh, I know all about it," said George. "I know that you are rich and uneducated, and that you can never hope to soar in the empyrean hights of literature and knowledge where I reside permanently. But, my love for your father's check-book will overcome all this. I appreciate fully the sacrifice I am making, but you must not seek to dissuade me."

"And do you love me so dearly, George?" the girl asked.

"Certainly, my darling. Without your love life would be nothing but a four flush to me. All my happiness is centered in my love for you. Can you deliberately cast that love aside, darling?"

A New Star.

A New York letter says: We are waiting for Lydia Montrose. For months she has been heralded as the coming tragedy queen, but her arrival has been delayed so long that it is probable that her debut will go over till next season. She is a New Orleans octoroon girl, whose beauty is said to be positively amazing. Her voice is very deep and rich, and she is fairly educated, having taught a colored school in the south for some years. It is not claimed that her dramatic ability is extraordinary, but that she has an instinct that grasps the roles she has been taught, firmly, and enables her to give them a distinctive coloring. It is in tragedy that great things are expected of her, because of her superb voice and magnificent presence. In fact, I guess the truth of the matter is that she will be most advertised as a beautiful woman. She is tall and lithe, with immense black eyes and a small mouth with glittering little teeth. Her face is so light that she blushes visibly in a way that makes her managers fall into rhapsodies, and her arms are models of symmetry. Her costumes will be revelations of gorgeousness in brilliant scarlets and reds, as the heaviest colors set off her complexion to the best advantage. She will be seen—seen indeed—in "Camille," which erratic and naughty character seems to be the favorite character with beautiful women, and it is proposed to revive "Anthony and Cleopatra" for her to star in. I should imagine that her Cleopatra would be worth seeing. It is also proposed to have her appear in an elaborate reproduction of the "Black Venus." If she is so very beautiful, and is properly managed, there is no question of her success, for New Yorkers will go to see a handsome woman every day in the week, and pay for it liberally.

A Story With a Moral.

Sometimes a short story will contain more meaning than a long sermon. It all depends on what the story is about. Here, for instance, is a brief story, but the moral is healthy:

A goat, which was noted for its combativeness, was walking on a pond last winter in a neighboring town, when he came to a hole in the ice made by some fishermen, and espied his face in the water. Thinking that he saw one of his fellows, he concluded that this was an opportunity not to be lost, and at once prepared for his usual attack. Drawing back a few feet, he lowered his head, shook his caudal appendage spasmodically, and at a tremendous pace rushed upon his shadow. But the old fellow went into the hole out of sight under the ice in a twinkling; nor has he since been seen.

Moral—Never rush into any thing without giving the subject due consideration.

Young man, what are you living for? Have you an object dear to you as life, and without the attainment of which you feel that your life will have been a wide, shoreless waste, peopled by the specters of dead ambitions? You can take your choice in the great battle of life, whether you will bristle up and win a deathless name, and owe everybody, or be satisfied with scabs and mediocrity. Many of those who now stand at the head of the nation as statesmen and logicians were once unknown, unhonored and unsung. Now they saw the air in the halls of Congress, and their names are plastered on the temple of fame.

You can win some laurels, too, if you will brace up and secure them when they are ripe. Daniel Webster, and President Garfield and Dr. Tanner and George Elliott were all, at one time, poor boys. They struggled against poverty and public opinion bravely on till they won a name in the annals of history, and secured to their loved ones palatial homes, with lightning rods and mortgages on them. So may you, if you make the effort.

All these things are within your reach. Live temperately on $9 a month. That's the way we got our start. Burn the midnight oil if necessary. Get some true, noble-minded young lady of your acquaintance to assist you. Tell her of your troubles and she will tell you what to do. She will gladly advise you. Then you can marry her, and she will advise you some more. After that she will lay aside her work any time to advise you. You needn't be out of advice at all unless you want to. She, too, will tell you when you have made a mistake. She will come to you frankly and acknowledge that you have made a jackass of yourself.

As she gets more acquainted with you she will be more candid with you, and in her unstudied girlish way, she will point out errors, and gradually convince you with an old chair-leg and other arguments, that you were wrong, and your past life will come up before you like a panorama, and you will tell her so, and she will let you up again. Life is indeed a mighty struggle. It is business. We can't all be editors and lounge around all the time, and wear good clothes, and have our names in the papers, and draw a princely salary. Some one must do the work and drudgery of life, or it won't be done.

Words of Wisdom.

We lose the peace of years when we hunt after the rapture of moments.

An elevated purpose is a good and ennobling thing, but we cannot begin at the top of it.

If you would keep a book and daily put down the things that worry you and see what becomes of them they would be of a benefit to you.

It is not well to give up the battle after a single defeat. Some people are totally discouraged by a disappointment, while others are so enraged by it that their strength and persistency are doubled.

The liberal reward of labor, as it is the necessary effect, so it is the natural symptom of increasing national wealth. The scanty maintenance of the laboring class on the other hand is the natural symptom that things are at a stand or going backwards.—[Adam Smith.

Nothing so assauges our feelings, even in the bitterness of parting by death, as the consciousness of having left nothing undone, little or great that lay in our power to bring a smile to the face or a cheerful feeling to the heart of those who have gone before us.

Though it be but a trifle—even a flower by the wayside, if it have beauty and fragrance—pluck it and hand it to your fellow-traveler, for if you wait to do great things for him he may have fallen from your side and disappeared forever before you have done aught to gladden his heart.

What are all regrets compared with the anguish of having parted from a friend—perhaps from our best beloved—with unkind and cruel words? It may have been those words were uttered carelessly, lightly, as the wild and wanton breezes weeps; but they leave a pain, as the breeze leaves some scattered rose-leaves to mark its track.

A Word of Caution.

As is usually the case where an article of true merit has attained a world wide reputation by its wonderful results, as the celebrated Electric Bitters have done, certain unprincipled parties have endeavored to imitate them, and expect to induce an unsuspecting public to purchase their faaudulent wares. Ask your druggist for the genuine Electric Bitters, that are guaranteed to cure, and take no others. Sold by all druggists at 50c.

So God, in his infinite pity,
Shuts the eyes of the children dear,
And they see not the fell destroyer,
Though their eyes are so bright and clear.
And I said; "There's no past for the children,
With its terrible pangs and stings;
And for them no brooding future
Spreading its threatening wings.
All they see is the present—to-day;
And so they laugh and sing at their play."

Petty Worries.

What a blessed thing it is that we can forget. To-day's troubles look large, but a week hence they will be forgotten and buried out of sight. If you would keep a book and daily put down the things that worry you and see what becomes of them it would be of a benefit to you.

You allow a thing to annoy you just as you allow a fly to settle on you and plague you; and you lose your temper—or rather get it, for when men are surcharged with temper they are said to have lost it,—and you justify yourself for being thrown off your balance by causes which you do not trace out. But if you would see what it was that threw you off your balance before breakfast, and put it down in a little book, and follow it up and out and ascertain what becomes of it, you would see what a fool you were in the matter.

The art of forgetting is a blessed art, but the art of overlooking is quite as important. And if we should take time to write down the original progress and outcome of a few of our troubles, it would make us so ashamed of the fuss we make over them that we should be glad to drop such things and bury them at once in eternal forgetfulness. Life is too short to be worn out by petty worries, frettings, hatred and vexation.

A World of Good.

One of the most popular medicines now before the American public, is Hop Bitters. You see it everywhere. People take it with good effect. It builds them up. It is not as pleasant to the taste as some other Bitters, as it is not a whiskey drink. It is more like the old fashioned bone-set tea, that has done a world of good. If you don't feel just right try Hop Bitters.—Nunda News.

Our Daughters.

The foe of American social life is the tendency of luxury and effeminacy among the well-to-do young women of our American cities and large towns. They do not realize how this dreadful mania for expensive pleasures and a life of alternate idleness and amusement is destroying their health, abolishing true marriage, feeding the flames of gross sensuality and intemperance among young men, and saddening the hopes of the best parents of the land. None of them will never know it in this world. But most of them have no real purpose to waste their lives in this wretched way. And it is a high crime in mothers, teachers, ministers of religion, and the public press to pander to this insanity. Thousands of good-hearted young girls are sacrificed every year, when a little wise and prudent guidance would save them. But we feel that they should be told that unless they change this life they will pass away like the flowers of June, and a more hardy and resolute class occupy their places.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Captain Hall, of the secret service, captured in Chicago three manufacturers of bogus coin, and secured their molds and about $600 in finished goods.

The interior department has recently issued a patent in favor of ex-President Harrison, for 160 acres of land in southern Ohio purchased in 1835 under the credit system.

The senate committee on postoffices and post-roads has been considering the propriety and advisability of reducing the postage on letters to 2 cents and on newspapers and other printed matter to one-half the present rates, and asks the postmaster general if the proposed rates can be adopted with safety.

Hon. W. A. Wheeler has declined to serve on the tariff commission, and the president will soon nominate successors to Wheeler and Phelps. It is authoritatively announced that John L. Hayes, of Massachusetts, who is a woolen manufacturer, will propose a reduction of 50 per cent. on the duty on woolen fabrics.

The commissioner of pensions asks the appropriation of $1,197,000 for clerk hire, with which amount he proposes to finish every claim within three years. The government has already paid over $500,000,000 for pensions to soldiers of the late war, and the amounts required for some years to come will be greater than the interest on the public debt.

The June report of the department of agriculture announces a decrease of 12 per cent. in the area of spring wheat. The condition of winter wheat is 100, and indications favor a crop of both varieties exceeded only by that of 1880. Corn-planting in half the states was not completed by June 1, but a large increase in acreage is reported. There are brilliant prospects for oats, with an increase of 7 per cent. in area.

The compulsory army retirement bill, if it shall become a law, will place upon the retired list six paymasters now in active service, thus creating that number of vacancies. In anticipation of the vacancies, it is said that there are already filed at the office of the secretary of war twelve hundred applications for appointment thereto, just two hundred for each place.

The tariff commission nominated by the president comprises William A. Wheeler, of New York; John L. Hayes, of Massachusetts; H. A. Oliver, Jr., of Pennsylvania; Austin M. Garland, of Illinois; Jacob Amber, of Ohio; John S. Phelps, of Missouri; Robert P. Porter, of the District of Columbia; J. W. H. Underwood, of Georgia, and Duncan F. Kenner, of Louisiana.

The pay of the tariff commissioners is to be $10 per day and expenses. Their route, as outlined in advance of confirmation, will be Long Branch, Coney Island, and Newport, spending the month of August at Saratoga; then a trip to the vineyards of California, and an autumn visit to the sugar plantations of Louisiana. There have been thirty-five applications for the position of secretary and stenographer.

Secretary Folger has given a clear statement of affairs connected with the cases of Doyle and Brockway. It appears that Detective Felker was assured that Doyle would be set free if he would furnish evidence which would convict of criminal collusion any employe of the bureau of engraving and printing, but not an item of such evidence has been submitted. The recent examination of Brockway served no purpose, as the counterfeiter positively refused to tell who furnished him with the plate, notwithstanding which he is to be released on the contract for immunity. Doyle's opportunity expires June 20, and it is fair to presume that he will then be sentenced.

In the International Typographical union at St. Louis, a telegram from the Washington union was read, stating that Senator Plumb had made war upon it because of its refusal to allow one of his political followers to work in the government printing office as a proof-reader. In response to a resolution recently introduced in the senate by Mr. Plumb, Public Printer [illegible] has addressed a letter to Vice President [illegible], to the effect that the [illegible] graphical and bookbinders' unions and should he refuse to comply [illegible] requisitions a general strike would be ordered, involving serious loss of time, although he would act at common sight direct.

Guiteau is solicitous for his spiritual guide Rev. Dr. W. W. Hicks, a Presbyterian minister of Washington, who will make daily calls at the jail. Guiteau spends most of his time in reading the Bible and a religious work which was given to him by Mr. Grubin of Baltimore. When he does not take his usual amount of exercise, he says that it is because he feels lazy. So far from giving way mentally, his intellect is bright, and he is able to argue his case with considerable legal sharpness. In a conversation with one of the officers, he said that Mr. Reed had been wrong in his recent moves in the case; that there is nothing that can be done about it; it is a crime if the record is wrong, for it has been ruled upon, and the judgment suspended. "If it is wrong," Guiteau said, "it has to go now. The question of jurisdiction has been settled, and there is nothing left of that question. The only hope is in the president; but I have told Reed and have told him to go to him and let all other things go."

The debate upon the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has shed some light on the pension question. The committee in framing the bill have undertaken so to increase the number of clerks employed, directly or indirectly, on pension cases, that the claims will be adjudicated within three years from July 1, 1882. There were 268,534 of those claims pending, undetermined, on April 1, and with the present number of clerks it would take eight years to dispose of them. The committee provide in the bill for increasing the number of clerks employed in the pension bureau from 742 to 1,500; the number in the surgeon-general's office from 237 to 766, the number in the adjutant-general's office from 421 to [illegible], and for the addition of 61 clerks in other offices where a small part of the work is done. The additional annual cost of these clerks will be $1,[illegible]42,420. The greater part of this sum is to be expended in the pension bureau, where the cost of clerical work will be raised from $866,540 to $1,[illegible], or more than doubled. It has been proposed by some to add a sufficient number of clerks to dispose of all the claims in one year instead of three, but it has been found that no more additional clerks than those provided in the bill can work upon the records to advantage, because there is only one copy of the records which those clerks must examine. It was thought that these records might be duplicated by photo-lithography, but an expert declared that their condition would not allow this. In order that fraudulent claims may not be allowed, the committee provide for 250 special examiners, whose duty it will be to go to the homes of claimants and examine witnesses. It is estimated that each of these agents can examine 252 claims a year, or 63,000 a year in all. The commissioner makes this startling estimate of the money which will be needed to satisfy claims for the next four years:

Year ending June 30, 1883	$[illegible]
Year ending June 30, 1884	[illegible]
Year ending June 30, 1885	[illegible]
Year ending June 30, 1886	[illegible]
Total for four years	$[illegible]

Of this, more than $[illegible] would be required for arrears. At the close of the year 1886 there will be about 400,000 pensioners, requiring about $[illegible] per annum. Up to April 1 there had been filed 8[illegible] claims, of which 608,[illegible] had been allowed and [illegible] rejected. Of the 268,534 pending on that date, [illegible] were entitled to arrears.

ARTHUR PARDINGTON has reached Jamestown, Dakota, and found hosts of friends there, and will remain two months, and may return to Thomson where he has an offer of business. He is well and thinks the western world is a great institution.

THERE will be a meeting in the chapel of the Baptist church, Friday evening, June 16th, to complete arrangements for the dinner, etc., contemplated for the Fourth of July. All interested, whether old or young, are especially invited to be present.

THE young people of the Baptist church of this village are making extensive arrangements to furnish strangers and friends with a warm dinner, ice cream, lemonade, etc., on the coming Fourth. This will be welcome intelligence to hot, hungry and thirsty Fourth of July-ers.

WE acknowledge a neat notice of the marriage of Mr. J. J. Wilson and Mrs. Franc A. Scifert, which took place at Romeo, Mich., on Tuesday, the 6th inst. The bride is well and favorably known here and the groom has made a very favorable impression upon the few persons he has met in Tecumseh. Their future home will be at 14 Park Avenue, Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Philo C. Mills had a family reunion at their new home in Adrian last week Thursday evening. Their two sons, Mr. A. W. Mills and Mr. E. L. Mills, and three daughters, Mrs. D. A. Dodge, Mrs. D. C. Blair, and Mrs. H. M. Pomeroy, and Mrs. A. F. Bixby, a sister of Mrs. Mills, were present with their families. A delightful evening was passed by those present.

THE death of Reuben Shurtz was a remarkable case. Mr. Shurtz, while driving his team about a week before his death, struck them with a lash whip and a small piece of the lash flew off and buried itself in his lower lip. The piece was taken out and he went on with his accustomed work.—About a week after lock-jaw set in and in twenty-four hours he was a corpse. His funeral was held last Friday morning at his residence, and the remains were taken to the cemetery in the Ladd district of Adrian for interment. Services were also held at the Ladd school house. The funeral was conducted by Rev. H. Shepard, of Tecumseh, and was largely attended by relatives and friends of the deceased.

WE have heard nothing about the Alumni Reunion this year, but take it for granted that arrangements are making for the usual annual exercises. As several of the officers and appointees [illegible] will be necessary [illegible] those who are left on the list to take matters into their own hands, or nothing may be accomplished. Below are the principal officers for the year:

W. H. BREARLY of the Detroit Evening News has issued and sent to this office, a copy of his new tourists' guide book for the three $20. July excursions "From Detroit to the Sea," and return via. the Grand Trunk R. R. The book is a decided improvement upon the former issues published annually during the six years that these excursions have been carried on, having 64 well edited and illustrated pages, and containing 43 maps engraved especially for this year's edition. The title page of the cover is an exact copy in ten colors of an oil painting of Glen Ellis Falls, near the Glen House, in the White Mountains, and is beautiful enough to frame. Every one contemplating a trip East this summer, whether they intend going on these excursions or not, should send 30 cts. and secure one. Those who do not wish to invest ten three cent stamps, in this guide book, should send one stamp for a circular.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The special meeting of the Farmers' Social Club will be held at Sand Lake Thursday, June 22nd. The lady members will please remember to provide plenty of refreshments, as it will be a picnic dinner and supper. Remember to glean the strawberry beds.

Mrs. F. C. RECTOR,
Chairman of Com.

What is Behind It?

Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., proprietor of the great medicine, called "Favorite Remedy," would have but little confidence to recommend the public to buy and use it if his own name were not behind it.—But the fact that he has staked his reputation upon it ought to be, and is, better than a thousand cheap certificates—in the opinion of the people. If you are sick with any complaint of the Blood, Kidneys, or Liver, Invest One Dollar in the "Favorite Remedy" and it will speak for itself.

A Physician's Opinion.

A physician writing to the journal of Health in speaking of Brown's Iron Bitters, having carefully analyzed its ingredients, says: "There is no other remedy in existence so harmless and yet so effective. No other compound should ever be used for general ill health and chronic diseases of the pulmonary, digestive, and urinary organs. It is mild, yet sure in its action, and gradually restores perfect health and strength to every function of the organs of life. Its action is so very mild that there is no room left for reaction and relapse, neither will its discontinuance bring on a craving for its use or renewal of past disorders.

Adrian Times: Mr. J. B. Clement, president of Blissfield, has been authorized to pick out the handsomest lady in the village to personate the Goddess of Liberty at the coming Fourth of July celebration in that village. Happy man—till the selection is made, and then he will probably require a body guard. However, the ladies can depend on a square, up-and-up choice.

I. Ship Speaks of His Wife.

Indianapolis, Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: My wife has for several years been a great sufferer from periodical attacks of Neuralgia in the head. Several of the most eminent physicians had been called upon to treat her, but they could only give temporary relief.

About two years ago she commenced using the Taxarine, and I am gratified to say, since then she has had no recurrence of those terrible pains. I attribute her restoration to health entirely to the use of Taraxine, and in conclusion would say to all who suffer that excruciating of all pains, to give Taxarine a trial.

Yours, etc. I. Ship.

A Report of Clerk of Circuit Court.

Clerk's Office, Johnson Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer: During the spring and summer my wife was a great sufferer from Indigestion and Dyspepsia, caused by a torpid liver. About a month ago she began using your Taraxine, and the first two doses gave her so much relief that she continued the use of it until two bottles had been taken, and I take pleasure in saying that her health is entirely restored.

Yours, etc., Isaac M. Thompson,
Clerk Circuit Court.

An Honest Preparation.

The world is so crammed with swindles that a really honest man or honest thing is almost as scarce as robins in January. Yet Mr. J. H. Northrop, of Lansingburg, N. Y., formerly Captain of the Troy Police, says Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is "an honest preparation." And the Captain ought to know, for the medicine cured him of Liver Complaint.—Try it, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

Morenci Observer: The generous response which our citizens have made to the needs of our local fair association in taking about 120 additional shares of the concern, is truly gratifying; yet Mr. Mace informs us that in order to put the institution on an entirely healthy basis a few more shares must be disposed of; and we hope our citizens will grandly come up "to the scratch" in the matter, take the shares and secure this fine property for the benefit of the village and surrounding country.

The farmers' Social Club of Tecumseh will hold their annual picnic at Sand Lake on Thursday of next week, June 22d.

ESTATE OF REUBEN H. SHURTZ.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office in the city of Adrian, on Tuesday, the 13th day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Della Shurtz, widow of said deceased, praying that administration of the estate of said deceased may be granted to Joseph Lanning or some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 10th day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL ARNER.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office in the city of Adrian on Wednesday, the 14th day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition of Richard Cadmus, alleging among other things, that he was guardian of said incompetent person and that said Samuel Arner has lately departed this life and praying for the allowance of his account as such guardian and that he may be ordered by said court to deliver over to the administrator of the estate of said Samuel Arner, deceased, all the estate in his hands as such guardian, and for his discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered that Monday, the 10th day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the next-of-kin of said ward and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing. AROUND THE COUNTY.

RIDGEWAY.

Alden Wickham claims to have the finest garden in the county.

Dan'l Raymond and wife, of Iowa, are out on a visit.

The village school and the school in dist. No. 5, have a joint picnic in J. Hall's woods next Friday afternoon.

John R. Clark is announced for a lecture at the Christian church Thursday evening. Subject, To and Fro in London.

Rev. Mr. Dunning, of Deerfield, is canvassing this township for Peoples cyclopædia and meeting with quite good success.

Rev. C. C. Sink will exchange pulpits with Bro. Kilpatrick next Sunday morning.

Mrs. Jane Thompson, formerly Mrs. Henry Larkin is spending a few days here. The house and lot across the street from J. F. Temple's is to be sold next Saturday, on the premises, subject to her dower.

Miss Jennie Kilpatrick closes her second term of school in dist. No. 5 this week. She is proving one of the most successful teachers in this locality, and has been engaged for the next term in the same district.

The report has gained quite a circulation that there is no poll tax this year for highway labor. This is untrue and if the tax is not on the road warrant, it ought to be.

The cutter at the stave mill lost a finger last week, and since, the mill has not been running.

Mr. & Mrs. John Houseman, of Clinton Co., are visiting here. They are both in quite feeble health, on account of injuries received within a year.

The vacancy in the office of drain commissioner, occasioned by the resignation of David Coryell, has at last been filled by the town board appointing John Britton, who has been sworn in and is ready for business. However, but little will probably be done, as the position taken from the start is that no drain will be laid by him unless all parties interested petition for it.

One of our village "laddies," on Saturday last, sought a bath in the all-but-limped little creek, and slipping his garments, numbering two, in a well-known pasture lot, at once proceeded to mingle with the paddling crabbs and pollywogs. When old Sol began to creep behind the western hills, with native instinct Bud thought of home, and then his homespun, which he found to his astonishment was being manufactured into milk by a village bovine. A wonderful looking animal was seen by several responsible men, women and children, the same afternoon creeping through the bushes and along the fences toward the village. They say it was surely (a) bare.

"Children's Day" will be celebrated at the Christian church at East Ridgeway July 2d

It was the privilege of your correspondent to attend "Children's Day" at the M. E. church, in Ridgeway village, last Sabbath evening, and I never beheld a church more beautifully decorated with floral gatherings, evergreens, cages of living birds, and pictorial hangings. The edifice was literally filled, above and below, with attentive listeners who had gathered from every direction to witness the exercises. The program was well arranged in all its parts, and the superintendent acquited himself with honor. The instrumental and vocal music was in itself worthy of applause; and the readings, compositions and declamations of a high and timely order. The occasion, which lasted until nearly ten o'clock in the evening, was not only highly commendable in every part but fully appreciated by the audience, and has made a most favorable impression upon the public mind in this locality of "Children's Day." The pastor, Mr. Kilpatrick, as well as the other instructors of the school were at the head of their respective classes, and bore a conspicuous part in the proceedings. The ladies of Ridgeway have won the esteem of our citizens for their labor preparatory to this occasion, and exhibited an excellent taste in their decorations and embellishments. The school of this church is large and regularly attended and fully equipped with an able corps of excellent instructors. The pastor is highly respected and is doing excellent work among his people.

AN OBSERVER.

FRANKLIN.

Franklin is valued at $1,168,750, by the board of Review.

Enough money has been pledged to secure the services of Rev. G. C. Shepard as pastor of the Congregational church for the ensuing year. Mr. S. graduates at Adrian college to-day and is a young man of ability.

There is every prospect of having a lawn social and ice cream festival at the M. E. parsonage next Tuesday evening, June 27. A pleasant time may be anticipated.

The funeral services of Edna S. Slater, daughter of John Slater, aged 16, were conducted by Rev. A. W. Wilson, at the residence of the late Joseph Slater last Tuesday, June 20. Her disease was a relapse of the typhoid fever.

A. Vanderwerker and Wm. B. Warren of Baker's Corners, arrived at the Center last Tuesday with their steam renovater. They renovated feather beds, pillows included for $1.50, and from what we can learn they give perfect satisfaction.

The protracted illness of Mrs. Jesse Pentecost resulted in her death last Thursday evening at the age of 63. The funeral services were held at the residence Sunday morning, conducted by Rev. A. W. Wilson. The music was furnished by the Congregational choir. A large number of neighbors and friends assembled to pay the last sad tribute of respect to one whom they had always held in high esteem.

MACON.

Miss Caddie Mills, who has been spending the winter months with friends in this vicinity, returned to her home in Barnegat, N.J., last week.

A large party of Clinton people, including the Supt. of the Woolen Mill and Secretary Kimball, visited Wampler's Lake on Friday last and had a good time genefally.

Will T. Eccles, the jolly pressman of the Herald Office happened in on Ye Editor of the News Saturday evening.

The tide turned at Town Hall on Saturday evening, and the amateurs realized finely, as they were greeted with a full house. To be repeated Saturday evening next.

We understand Dr. A. F. Tuttle and wife are soon to take a trip to the "land of Ophir"

Mrs. Ed. R. Smith and daughter are visiting friends at Mason and Charlotte.

F. R. Adams, Homœopathic doctor, arrived and located.

The lightning shocked quite a number of our citizens last Sunday.

S. B. Rose has finished repairing his residence.

The A. P. Wilkins Concert and Convention Troupe gave a free concert at the Congregational church. After the entertainment they organized a large class in vocal culture. We learn that they visit Tecumseh, and we are confident they will please your music-loving people.

The ladies of the Baptist church are to have an Ice Cream Festival at Geo. Calhoun's, Tuesday evening next.

The Alumni exercises at Manchester take place this week and the News is to be well represented, C. F. Field have been elected historian and George toast master. By the way, George toasted a girl, or rather what we were about to say, gave a toast to a young lady. I believe her name was merry-few, or something like it. I suppose there was not many of her, but she is likely to have assistance in as noted a place for merriment as Manchester, and then to think of it; George said when he was last at home he saw a man with boots on. Verily it must have been far ahead of "4-paws." We have heard of the boy strayed or stolen, with high-heel socks and no boots, but a man with boots on must look funny. I guess George will do for a toaster. Certainly that Alumni should be a grand affair with two fields filled to overflowing with historial facts and toasting appurtenances.

Sirs—I have been taking Hop Bitters for inflammation of kidneys and bladder. It has done for me what four doctors failed to do. The effect of Hop Bitters seemed like magic to me. W. L. Carter.

Mr. Richard Crowley, of Salem, Mass., says: "I can from personal experience, recommend Brown's Iron Bitters as being a permanent cure for indigestion, dyspepsia, sick stomach, painful urination, etc. It really strengthens the whole general system. Its effect is most wonderful.

Hudson Gazette: Both village justices, and every lawyer in Hudson, who is not feed by the council with the people's money, is against the policy of forcing measures against the unanimous protest of parties most concerned. And we should really like to hear the candid opinions of the hired attorneys of the board! We believe they are all too strongly tinctured with true Democracy or Republicanism (if you please), to endorse the action of the council.

Wealth is pretty well brought down in these days to a question of health. If you are not in thorough good health you are not fit for the daily battle of life. A man in poor health, can barely hold his own nowadays, and as to increasing his income that is out of the question. Therefore brain tonics, heart tonics, liver tonics, attractive tonics and electric tonics are concocted by the hundred, and certain cures and safe cures by the thousand as if there was safety in numbers. And all the while there is but one cure. Natures own remedy. A simple natural combination of indigenous Herbs, such as are contained in Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup.

For all inflammation of the bronchial tubes or bad colds, Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a splendid remedy. A few drops should be taken clear on sugar every three or four hours, and bathe the throat and chest two or three times a day. It speedily allays the irritations, ticklings and itching, and creates a healthy action, and a complete cure is readily effected.

Kissing Baby.

BY MRS. A. M. DIAZ.

Oh, lovelier than the rosebud
Is my precious babykin;
And the nicest place for kissing him—
The sweetest place—is not his face,
'Tis underneath his chin.

But, ah! it is not every one
The pleasure that may win,
Of kissing my dear baby—
My pretty one, my darling one—
Just underneath his chin!

For it would never do, you know,
That practice to begin,
Of letting everybody come
And have this blessing babe to kiss
Right underneath his chin!

For who, I pray, would stay away
If a kisser I had been,
And given to all the people leave
To take a kiss so sweet as this?
This underneath his chin?

What! so many little children,
Wanting to come in
And kiss my precious treasure—
My beauty bright, my heart's delight—
Here underneath his chin?

Well, if you are clean and wholesome,
And dressed neat as a pin,
With no speck of dirt upon you,
You may come near and kiss him here,
Right underneath his chin.

Though, if unkind or selfish
Or ill-tempered you have been,
Oh, then I could not bear you come
So close as this, and then to kiss
Dear baby under his chin!

Now comes papa with whistle and clap:
He thinks with all that din
That he will get—yes, take just one—
Two! three! Oh, no! Why, these cost high!
Those underneath his chin.

Sure I must laugh! Papa declares
He is so near akin,
That he owns half that kissing place—
That sweetest place, that coziest place
I moor my baby's chin!

SYLVIA'S FLIGHT.

She was very young—not more nineteen, yet there was a singularly quiet look upon her pale face as of one who had known sorrow. It was even so: Sylvia had been wedded to Ernest Normanton by her father's dying bed. The tie between father and daughter had been very strong. He had been everything to the lonely young girl, and they had drifted about over the world together, Bohemian fashion. Mr. Charlton was something of an artist; also, notes of travel from his pen brought him no mean recompense; yet there was nothing laid by. The girl was a fine scholar—her father being her only instructor.

Among other acquaintances who had drifted into and out of their lives, Ernest Normanton had proved himself a true and faithful friend. Some subtle attraction drew the two men together, and strengthened the bond between them. Ernest never lost track of them. He was nearly twice the age of Sylvia, a handsome, kingly-looking man, with dark hazel eyes and a long silken black beard, and beautiful teeth. Sylvia never had looked upon him as a lover. She admired him greatly, but was very shy of him—consequently it was something of a shock to her when Mr. Normanton had asked her, gravely and kindly, to become his wife, and her father, whose dear face was already growing grey with the shadow of death, begged her to consent, and to have the ceremony performed at once, that he might be sure before he died that his darling had a protector who would never forsake her.

The next few days were like a horrible dream to Sylvia—the still white lips which had ever smiled upon her—the tall slender form, and the quiet hands, all framed by the dark outline of the plain oak coffin—the solemn burial service—the coming back to the little suite of rooms where she had been so happy with her beloved parent. For two days Sylvia went herself nearly sick, and Ernest Normanton cared for her much as if she had been a baby.

Then he took her home—to his home in England, and then, for the first time, Sylvia realized that her husband was a rich man.

The grand mansion, surrounded by extensive grounds, was most sumptuously furnished; and the stately old lady who welcomed them was dressed like a duchess.

Mr. Normanton smiled at the illy concealed wonder in his little wife's face—smiled in such a bright, tender way that Sylvia, looking at him, felt a new and strange emotion thrill her rapturously. So, under all the grief for her dead father, there was a half awakened hope of future happiness.

Returning now from a brisk walk about the grounds, some voices—the voices of her husband and her mother-in-law—floated out to her from the open window. The lady's words were not distinct, but Sylvia held her breath with sudden agony, as Ernest's quiet tones cut through the clear air.

"Mother, do not talk of that. I have put Bertha from my life for ever. I married little Sylvia out of feeling for her dying father; but——"

Sylvia waited to hear no more. They had not seen her; and she ran up the broad stairs to her chamber. Throwing herself upon the bed, she lay staring at the wall with dry, tearless eyes, until her husband entered the room. Then she feigned sleep.

He moved quietly about the chamber for a moment, and then paused to press his lips to her temple and upon her closed eyes. A few seconds later she heard him giving orders in the hall to one of the servants.

"Do not disturb your mistress on any account, Martin; she is not well to-day, and has fallen asleep. And, Martin, tell Andrews to get the dog-cart ready in time for the six o'clock train; I am going to London this evening."

It was not, then, love which he felt for her; it was pity—the pity of a large, generous nature for a lonely, unprotected girl!

When Ernest returned from London on the following day, his wife was gone! No one had seen her leave the house, but she was surely gone, and, in her place, they had found a sealed letter directed to Mr. Normanton. He tore it open and read these words:

"I overheard a part of your conversation with your mother, this afternoon—enough to assure me that you married me out of a feeling of pity, and that another woman has been dearer to you than ever I can be; therefore I am going away—where you will not be able to find me."

Ernest Normanton read the note through with the tears gathering in his handsome eyes, and then passed it to his mother.

"My poor little girl," he said; "if she had heard the whole she would not have left me. I must find her, mother—I will hunt the world over, but I will find her!"

A sleepy little village on the Sussex coast. Few strangers ever came there, and when Ernest Normanton made his appearance in the place one September day, many curious eyes were turned upon him.

Thirty minutes later he ran down the steps of the Reverend Mr. Peter's dwelling, and in a short time stood before a tiny cottage.

Here, half-turned from him, sat a young mother, swaying to and fro in a light cane chair, while her baby's eager lips clung to the white breast, and his long, dark lashes drooped drowsily over his eyes.

Ernest's handsome face flushed at the sight. Mr. Peters, in directing him to spot, had not spoken of a child. His pulse throbbed hotly as he watched her. Then she began to sing—her graceful dark head bending low over the little one. A tender cradle song, the words dreamy and peaceful; yet a certain undertone of sadness brought tears into the listener's eyes, and when the last low, sweet note died away Ernest Normanton knelt beside mother and baby, inclosing both in his eager embrace.

"My wife—my darling wife," he said, low and fondly; "thank Heaven all my wearisome months of searching are ended! Do not speak until I have explained the words which sent you from me.

"Bertha is the name of a woman for whom I possessed a mad infatuation in my more youthful days. I cherish no tender memory of her; she was fickle and unprincipled. Had you stayed to hear my sentence finished, Sylvia, you would have known that even then, I knew that my girl-wife had my truest, deepest love, although when we were married I thought only of giving you my protection. I have been looking for you ever since you left us, my darling! And this little one—oh, my poor, brave little wife! how you have suffered in silence, and alone."

Sylvia, dumb with surprise, and held down by her husband's strong arms; had sat like a white statue until the mention of the child, who awakened by the sound of a strange voice, began to make sundry gurgling and cooing noises, after the manner of babies; while the young mother, her white face flushing the color of a wild-rose, shook the baby's drapery and lifted him up.

"He is ours, Mr. Normanton," she said, smiles and tears striving for victory.

"Mr. Normanton, indeed!" as he cradled his little son in his arms. "To think of my wife calling the father of her baby 'Mr. Normanton!'"

"Ernest," whispered Sylvia, tremulously; "That is baby's name, too; and oh, my husband, forgive me and take me home. I have longed for you so much!"

It was a nine days' wonder among the good people of O——; this meeting of husband and wife; the quiet little lady, who earned her living by writing for papers and magazines, having been looked upon as a widow.

Advice From Bill Nye.

A recent letter from Michigan, written in lead pencil, and evidently during hours when the writer should have been learning her geography lesson, is very enthusiastic over the prospect of coming out here where one girl can have a lover for every day in the week. She signs herself Rosalinde with a small r, and adds in a postscript that she "means business."

Yes, Rosalinde, that's what we are afraid of. We had a kind of a vague fear that you meant business, so we did not reply to your letter. Wyoming already has women enough who write with a lead pencil. We are also pretty well provided with poor spellers, and we do not desire to ransack Michigan for affectionate but sapheaded girls.

Stay in Michigan, Rosalinde, until we write to you, and one of these days when you have been a mother eight or nine times, and as you stand in the golden haze in the back yard, hanging out damp shirts on an uncertain line, while your ripe and dewy mouth is stretched around a basswood clothes pin, you will thank us for this advice.

Michigan is the place for you. It is the home of the sweet singer and the abiding place of the Detroit Free Press. We can't throw any such influence around you here as those you have at your own door.

Do not despair, Rosalinde. Some day a man, with a great, warm, manly heart and a pair of red steers will see you and love you, and he will take you in his strong arms and protect you from the Michigan climate, just as devotedly as any of our people here can. We do not wish to be misunderstood in this matter. It is not as a lover that we have said so much on the girl question, but in the domestic aid department, and when we get a long letter from a young girl who eats slate pencils and reads "Ouida" behind her atlas, we feel like going over there to Michigan with a trunk strap and doing a little missionary work.—Boomerang.

Speaking of interviews reminds me of a rather good story. When the Duke of Beaufort was in this country a reporter waited upon him to interview him. The duke at the time happened to be walking up and down the lobby of the hotel. "I believe I have the honor of addressing the Duke of Beaufort," observed the reporter. "Yes, that is my name, sir," and he immediately turned on his heel, but the reporter was not to be suppressed. "I represent the ——." "O, do you?" said his grace, and he resumed his walk. The newspaper man was nonplussed for the moment. Taking out his note-book and following up the duke, he resumed: "My object in calling upon you was to ascertain your opinion on——" "Young man," interrupted the duke, "do you see that door? Well my opinion is that you had better go out by it just as soon as possible."—The Town.

Marriage Brokers.

In a large double parlor of an old-fashioned house in a once fashionable down-town street, an old gentleman with a white mustache and a sparse thatch of white hair on his head sat at a table, says the New York Sun, opposite a younger man with bushy brown hair and mustache imperial. Two large piles of circulars lay on the table by some bundles of cards printed in English, French, and German. There was very little furniture. Four chromos gave questionable adornment to the walls. On a round table in the back parlor were two large photograph albums, one of them entirely empty and the other containing half a dozen photographs of young women. The two gentlemen spoke with foreign accent. They were waiting for bachelors or widows. They constituted the national matrimonial alliance bureau, which has been organizing in this city for two months past. The promoters of this benevolent enterprise have been engaged in business of similar kind in Vienna, and have undertaken to reproduce here a matrimonial exchange such as has existed in Berlin, Paris, and London for years. Their purpose is "to facilitate acquaintances between ladies and gentlemen as means to lead to happy matrimonial alliances."

"Not only respectably, but with great circumspection, discretion, and delicacy. We seek to engender confidence in ourselves as mediators, and we promise happy results."

"I want a wife for instance."

The affable mediator opened the empty album, closed it quickly, and opened the other one at the tintype of a healthy-looking Chicago girl who wants a husband. She is twenty-three years old and large for her age. The other pictures in the album were of fair German girls. All of them were of modest faces and comely.

"You want a wife," the broker continued. "You pay $3 and register your name, address and business. I look up your reference and put your photograph in the album. Then you pick out by the pictures the girl you think you'd like to marry. She looks at your picture, and if mutually agreeable, you meet here on Sunday afternoon. If the promises of the photograph are made good in person, you two are left to conduct your future negotiations as you please, and you pay me one or two per cent. on the money you give your wife or the dowry she brings you.—See?"

"Do you find that the people who come to you have much money?"

"Not as a rule."

"Who are they?"

"People of all sorts."

It was noteworthy that the photographs on file were all of young women. Separate days are set apart for men and women to call, and a woman is in charge of the rooms on the days that women may attend. Negotiations may also be conducted by letter, and correspondency may be carried on in almost [illegible] appear to be perfectly honest in their expectation that their matrimonial enterprise will thrive in New York.

Taking Cold.

Keep the feet dry and warm, and the whole body comfortably clad, and you may bid defiance to all sorts of weather.

The worst colds—those that are followed by dangerous diseases—often come from getting the feet wet, and then neglecting too long to change the stockings and shoes for dry ones; thus the blood becomes chilled, and the circulation impeded, so that the waste matters, the products of combustion—as ashes are the product of combustion of fuel—are not carried out of the system, but some remain and become the seeds of disease.

Persons who live much of the time indoors suffer more from colds than those who are more exposed to the open air, with all its changes of temperature. If they remain for a few moments in a cold room, or sit near a door or window where they are exposed to a draught of air, they immediately take cold. This often occurs in the fall or early winter, and before recovery from the first attack another follows, so that some persons are hardly free from colds during the winter; thus the air passages and lungs are all that time in a congested state, which favors the development of diseases peculiar to those organs.

There is, fortunately, a remedy against these evils; and at some period in the future, as remote, perhaps, as the "glacial period" in the past, it may be generally adopted. This remedy is regular exercise or labor in open air. It is a specific against colds, and, indeed, against most other diseases. No curable case of lung disease can long resist this treatment. To an invalid who can afford it, a saddle-horse is a luxury that makes a pleasure of duty; but if the finances as well as the lungs are weak, do not be discouraged, but, in Californian parlance, "rough it," and you may recover and enjoy your horse and your fortune afterward.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Shroud Making.

The business of shroud making has increased to an amazing extent within five years. Formerly nearly all of the small retail undertakers had their shrouds made by women, whom they employed as occasion demanded, but now the entire trade is supplied by large jobbing houses. There are seven of these firms in New York, and they turn out 20,000 shrouds a year. Agents travel over the country, and it is by no means an uncommon thing to have a small dealer lay in a stock of 150 or 200 shrouds at a time. Expert shroud-makers are in demand. It takes nearly two years to learn the trade, which is akin to dressmaking, and the pay is good.

Sold His Moustache.

The gentleman who has been travelling around town for the past day or two with half a moustache on his upper lip is not insane, but you can bet your bottom dollar that he is mad.

Last Saturday evening, while having a good time with a party of good fellows, he was joked some about his vanity with reference to his moustache, and, after he had been worked up to the proper pitch, a vicious friend in the crowd offered him ten dollars for the hair on his upper lip. The offer was promptly accepted, the cash paid, and an assignment made, and then the ten dollars was expended in lengthening the good time.

The following day the friend called for a delivery of the moustache. A move was made to a barber shop, and the talkative gentleman of the striped stick got all his implements; and then all the manliness of that friend was displayed. He announced that he wanted but half of the moustache for the present, and insisted on the other half being kept untrimmed for. Threats had no effect; tears were of no avail; and, therefore, it is that the gentleman goes about town with one side of his upper lip covered with hair, and the other side as smooth and soft and kissable as a maiden's mouth.

The Spanish Infatuation.

At the time when Angel Partor, the Spanish bull fighter, was recently wounded by a maddened bull at Madrid, the London Standard correspondent thus describes the subsequent scenes in town:

"All the evening papers were greedily bought, read aloud under lamp-posts, hawked in clubs and cafes, while hundreds of the more enthusiastic 'sportsmen' called at Partor's house to condone with this gladiator of modern Spain. The most common remark that evening was: 'How is Partor?' Well might a proper Conservative paper remark that more enthusiasm, far more interest, far keener curiosity is shown for the 'national sport' than for such things as forms of government, imperial policy, and other passing pre-occupations of the political world; that we do not move the deeper strata, the undercurrents where the real instincts of a society and a nation are revealed as in its most popular pastimes. The amazing thing is that such a survival of barbarism should not only be still popular in Spain, but that, as a public amusement, it appears to have been for a time quickened into renewed vitality. The only trouble now is to provide, not bulls, but 'Matadors' who are willing to run the risk of being ripped up by the horns of an angry bull in the ring. And yet, after their recent experience, it is not likely that the mob will be content with any less sensational aspect of these horrible spectacles."

The Bridge of Sighs.

A correspondent describing a first walk in Venice, says: "At every few yards a watery way runs into the main artery, and you have to mount the steps to the arched bridge. On one of these bridges there is an excellent view of the Bridge of Sighs, rising above the same canal. [illegible] are standing by the beautiful columns which support the famous lion of St. Mark and St. Theodore on a crocodile—the first being the tutelary saint of the city, and patron, the other of the ancient Republic. This spot was, in olden times, the place of execution, and as we step across it now the vision of a scaffold, an assembled crowd and manacled human creatures come up between us and sights of St. Mark's square beyond, the most interesting place in the most interesting of cities whose history is a romance and existence a dream.'—Hundreds and hundreds of pigeons crowd the stone pavement, and little children and their nurses are feeding them. These pigeons come every day to be fed, and tradition has it that they are the descendants of a flock Admiral Dandalo used in besieging the island of Candia. They brought him intelligence which greatly aided him in the capture, and he afterwards sent them to Venice, where they have ever since been carefully tended. When the music is playing they keep up a regular dance in the air, and seem to delight in the sweet sounds."

Unexpected Criticism.

One of the most eloquent and popular clergymen of Austin, Texas, says Harper's Magazine, being about to ascend the steps leading to his church a few Sundays ago, was asked by a partially blind old lady, who did not recognize him, to help her up the steps. With his usual urbanity he complied with her request. Just as they reached the top steps she asked him who was going to preach.

"Parson Smith," he replied, that being his own name.

"O Lord!" exclaimed the old lady. "Help me down again. I'd rather listen to a man sawing wood. Please help me down again. I don't care to go in."

At first the clergyman was inclined to refuse, but, on reflection, he gently assisted her down the steps again, remarking as they reached the bottom: "You are quite right, madam, about not going into the church. I wouldn't go in either if I wasn't paid for it."

Carlyle on Fashionable People.

I see something of fashionable people here (wrote Carlyle to Miss Welsh), and truly, to my plebian conception, there is not a more futile class of persons on the face of the earth. If I were doomed to exist as a man of fashion, I do honestly believe I should swallow ratsbane, or apply to hemp or steel before three months were over. From day to day and year to year the problem is, not how to use time, but to waste it least painfully. They have their dinners and their routs. They move heaven and earth to get everything arranged and enacted properly; and when the whole is done, what is it? Had the parties wrapped themselves in warm blankets and kept their beds, much peace had been among His Majesty's subjects, and the same result, the uneasy destruction of half-a-dozen hours, had been quiet as well attained. No wonder poor women take to opium and scandal.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

It is said that when certain old but sportive citizens of Jackson read in the Evening News that Sophie Lyons had been let out of the house of correction in Detroit long enough to go down town, they immediately took to the woods.

What is Behind It?

Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., proprietor of the great medicine, called "Favorite Remedy," would have but little confidence to recommend the public to buy and use it if his own name were not behind it.—But the fact that he has staked his reputation upon it ought to be, and is, better than a thousand cheap certificates—in the opinion of the people. If you are sick with any complaint of the Blood, Kidneys, or Liver, invest One Dollar in the "Favorite Remedy" and it will speak for itself.

STONES IN THE KIDNEYS

And Bladder Expelled—Long Suffering of one of Troy's Best People—A Lucky Man.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1889.

Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7/16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly,
James Andrews.

KING OF THE BLOOD.

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the Stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

ITS NAME IS ITS BEST DESCRIPTION as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 40 to 50 doses. Sold by dealers in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you, as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Mining projects are out of favor. People are sick of the hole business.

What is that which we wish for, and when obtained, we never know we have it? Sleep.

Why is a Fall River spinner so much like a base-ball player? Easy enough; because he is so often out on strikes.

It is better to soak your feet than to soak your head, but many young men don't see it in that way.

A scientist says "a big comet is now dashing toward a spotted sun." Its aim, no doubt, is to "knock the spots off it."

The Canadian Parliament has legalized marriage with a dead wife's sister. Well, one would know what kind of a mother-in-law he was to have.

A boy says in his composition that "Onions are the vegetable that makes you sick if you don't eat them yourself."

Aminadab's pet dog bit him the other day. He says he had no idea the dog would be the puppy-traitor of such an act.

With good beefsteak at twenty-five cents a pound people can almost forgive the followers of Moses for falling down and worshipping a golden calf.

Young lady—"Mr. L——, don't you admire 'Locksley Hall'?" Mr. L.—"Well—er I don't know as I ever saw that building."

"And the cares of daylight flee," says Earl Marble in a "barcarole." The cares of a daylight flea are very apt to make a barker roll.

An exchange remarks that no man can afford to make a fool of himself. Our cotemporary forgets, however, that some men are utterly reckless of expense.

"Ain't that a lovely critter, John," said Jerusha, as they stopped opposite the leopard's cage. "Waal, yes," said John, "but he's dreadfully freckled, ain't he?"

Some men always look on the bright side. Said the gentleman who was run over by the "Black Maria." "Well, there's one consolation! The fact that I was run over by the thing shows that I wasn't inside it!"

"I never pretend to know a thing that I do not," remarked Brown. "When I don't know a thing I say at once, 'I don't know.'" "A very proper course," said Fogg, "but how monotonous your conversation must be?"

One of the managers of a hospital asked an Irish nurse which he considered the most dangerous of the many cases then in the hospital. "That sur," said Pat; he pointed to a case of surgical instruments lying on the table.

Sentimental diner: "Eat a lark! Partake of one of the choiring songsters at heaven's gate! I would as soon eat a hymn!" Practical friend: "Ya-as, never touch small birds—they all feed on worms."

An aged Scotch lady, knowing the habits of her old and spoiled servant, when she wished a note taken without loss of time, held it open and read it over to him, saying: "There, noo, Andrew, ye ken a' that's in it: noo, dinna [illegible] read it all."

An English bishop querulously remarked to his servant that he was dying. "Well, my lord," said the good fellow, "you are going to a better place." "John," replied the prelate, with an air of conviction, "there's no place like old England!"

Ubiquitous: When Mrs. Homespun heard of the recent assassination in Ireland and that it was attributed to the Irish, she exclaimed: "Massy sakes! You don't tell me the Irish have got into Ireland? Well, well, I believe they're everywhere!"

Distinguished American (just off the stage, and much pleased with himself as the wicked marquis)—"Phew! Well, I wasn't so very bad, old man, was I?" Author (prompter and stage manager)—"Well, my dear fellow, I don't exactly know how bad you can be."

Curran, the witty Irish barrister, was pleading the cause of a certain Miss Tickle. The judge was also a bit of a wit, and opened his case with: "Tickle my client, the defendant, my lord——" The judge interrupted him with: "Tickle her yourself, Curran; you're as well able to do it as I am."

"Don't drag your feet along the ground so!" says a fond mother to the child with whom she is walking; "it wears out your boots." "Yes, ma," replies the little one; "but it wears out the ground, too!" Somehow or other, mamma doesn't regard this as a sufficient compensation.

An Irish footman, having carried a basket of game from his master to a friend, waited a considerable length of time for the customary fee, but, finding no present appeared, scratched his head and said: "Sir, if my master should say, 'Paddy, what did the gentleman give you?' what would your honor have me tell him?"

Meteorological: An Irish emigrant who stood shivering in front of Castle Garden one morning last week thus addressed his equally forlorn and gruesome companion: "I don't understand it at all, Pat; when we lift owld Oireland it was in the month of May. Tin days we tuk to cross the ragin say, an' begorrah it's Decimber."

A German actor, anxious to secure some applause and unable to pay for a claque, secured a place in the gallery for his nine children and instructed them carefully as to the moment when they should clap their hands and shout "bravo!" The moment arrived at last, and to his amazement a chorus of nine called out: "Bravo, papa, bravo."

Young George having importuned his father for a horse, the indulgent parent presented him with the ancient steed which for years had carried him about the city streets. A few days afterward the affectionate son interviewed his father, saying, "Father, can't you give me a horse a little nearer my own age? That would be more of a companion for me."

Fashion Notes.

Flowers are extravagantly used for hat and bonnet trimmings.

Lace frills are worn around the neck and wrists as much as ever.

It is the fashion among the French aristocracy to wear black silk underclothing.

Sicilienne, Bengaline, Victoria, velours and other repped silks are used for full dress toilets in preference to satin.

Sleeves of French dresses with stylish fullness at the armhole have but one long seam—that inside the arm, while the outer seam begins at the elbow.

Many slender ladies have their gloves reach nearly to the shoulder, pushing them down to the elbow and allowing the extra fullness to wrinkle over the arm.

Fine colored hoisery should be washed in tepid water, with white castile soap, and rinsed in cold water. It should be dried in the shade, and should be turned wrong side out when being laundried.

The newest trimmings upon dress skirts are made with the old-fashioned Louis XIV. sagging puffs. These puffs are really pretty and effective upon the tunic or overdress, but give an underskirt a baggy appearance, quite the reverse of graceful.

Glace silks, which always make up into bright and stylish dresses, are to be much worn this Summer. Some of the new patterns have a satin chene stripe, brightened with tiny bouquets of field flowers. Satin and Pekin reps are also in fashion once more.

Both bonnets and hats run through small, medium and immense sizes, the bonnets developing through numerous modifications of the little French toque and the snug-fitting princesse cap, into the more pretentious Directoire or poke, and ending in the formidable Callache bonnet of other days. In round hats the styles begin with pretty cottage and Gypsy shapes, and grade up to the dimensions of a small cart-wheel; these monstrosities of straw being made up of numerous dents, smashed-in angles and eccentric curves—an eccentricity which is noticeable both in crown and brim, with wild freaks in garniture in keeping with the shape of the hat.

A Boy's Composition on the Horse.

The hawse is a noble animal. He has four legs, one at each corner. The hawse has a head at one end and a tail on the other, which is different from the eliphant, for he has a tail on both ends. There are a grate many kinds of hawses. There is the black hawse, the white hawes, the gray hawes, the brown hawse, the chestnut hawse and the hawse-chestnut, the reddish hawse and the hawse-reddish. I don't like hawse-reddish, [illegible] them cry. There's the saw-hawse, the clothes-hawse, the hawse-voice, the hawse-pital and the hawse-pistol. Besides, there is the Colt's revolver, the pony of brandy, the night-mare, the Lord-mare, mare-ely, and Mary had a little lamb. The hawse is the only animal who wears shoes, but he does not take them off when he goes to bed like boys and girls. Hawses have to work. If I was a hawse, I'd wish I was a kow, 'cause kows do not work, but only loaf round eating all day. I like the hawse, and if I had one I would not let Jim Bunker ride on him, 'cause he makes mouths at my sister. You always can find a hawse in the street, and you can tell him because he has big eyes and a bed. The hawse has a flowing coal-scuttle—(looks intently at the paper)—no—the hawse has—has a flowing coal-black mane. Some boys likes goats, but as for me, give me a hawse or—give me deth!

The Southern Pig.

One ought to see what the groundwork of all this pork business is. A wild hog down South is a wonderful creation to a Northerner, who is accustomed to see hogs so fat that they can hardly walk. Well, I don't know as they can walk here, but they can run. See one broadside to, and you would think it weighed two hundred and fifty pounds; and let it turn about head on, and it looks like a strip of sheet iron stood upon the edge. Nearly all the live ones I saw were black, and about as thin as a board; but when it came to annihilating space, I could see how they were made so thin. The air offers no more resistance to them than a tub of lard does to a cheese knife. I saw one run along by the side of the railroad track, keeping up with the train for about a quarter of a mile, when he suddenly thought he would show us how he could run when he was so inclined, and, gathering himself up, he darted along by the car, overtook the tender, gained a lap on the engine, and crossed the track ahead of it, and ran into the woods. If he had kept that gait until we had got into Washington, he would have been half-way through Alaska. Probably, next to the carrier-pigeon, the Southern wild hog is the fastest bird in the world.

A number of influential Jews recently met in St. Petersburg to consult upon the miseries of their race in Russia, and to devise measures for the prevention of further atrocities. After several persons had spoken, none of whom had anything to recommend except emigration, an aged man named Schmerling, representative of the community of Berditcheff, began to relate the trials to which his neighbors had been exposed. As he proceeded he grew more and more excited, until, apparently overcome by his emotions, he fell upon the floor. An examination showed that he was dead.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching, particularly at night after getting warm in bed, acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, nothing of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Rev. J. M. Cotherwery, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

The broom brigade fever has struck Morenci, and the first drill was held last week.

Since 1878 wages have advanced about six per cent. During the same time the cost of living has advanced about twenty-five per cent. Perhaps the cause of the discontent among laboring men may be found in this fact.

THE annual session of the Adrian District M. E. S. S. Institute will be held at Monroe on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, June 27th and 28th. Rev. R. S. Pardington will read a paper on "Children at public worship." Entertainment will be provided for all who attend and a cordial invitation is given to all.

The former practice of western people going east to pass the summer and spending thousands of dollars at eastern watering places is happily going out of fashion. The west abounds in beautiful lakes, noble rivers, quiet rural nooks, and wild forest scenery in which the taste of the most fastidious can be fully satisfied. A resident of Michigan can find summer resorts within a few hours' ride from home, and within his own state, that are not excelled by any of the fashionable resorts on the Atlantic coast. When you set out to go "summering" bear this fact in mind and stay near home.

American housekeepers are proverbially extravagant. The present high price of beef and some kinds of provisions may not be without its compensating advantages. It will compel the cook to curtail the kitchen expenses, and will disclose new resources by which a good meal can be provided. Soup, when well made, can supply the place of meat at one meal in the day. Rice is a more nutritious food than potatoes, is easily cooked, and is much cheaper when potatoes retail at $1.00 per bushel or more. Oat meal is becoming a staple article of diet in many families, and is recognized as one of the best hygienic agencies of the cook room. Indian corn, which is the cheapest of all grain, can be utilized in many ways, not only to fatten pork, but to fatten babies in the house as well. Even a bowl of mush and milk makes a wholesome, economical meal, providing the bowl be large enough, and the householder is blessed with a cow of his own.

The American Medical Convention recently in session at St. Paul excluded the New York delegation. The New York State Society had in February last passed a resolution permitting "regular" physicians to hold consultation with homœopathists. As this was a direct violation of the rules of the American Society, the latter took occasion to punish the New York Branch by excluding their delegates from the convention. This action opens a controversy which may be long and bitter. In the exclusion of the New York delegates the sticklers for regularity may have the best of the argument, but to the non-professional outsider the more sensible way would seem to be to abrogate the rule. The day has gone by when the homœopathic physician can be sneered at and dismissed with the epithet of "quack." If homœopaths were mere quacks, like astrologers or weather prophets, who live on the credulity of the public, "regular" physicians would be performing a duty by discrediting them. But homœopaths do not occupy this position. They constitute a large, powerful and growing branch of the medical profession. They have obtained legal recognition in the United States' army and navy. They number 8,000 physicians and control a dozen medical colleges. It is impossible to tell how many families are dependent upon this large body for medical care, but the number is very large, so large and respectable that it is absurd and monstrous to assert that they are given over entirely to quacks and cheats. To the unsophisticated layman the proof of the pudding is in the eating, the best physician is the one who cures his patients.—Judged by this standard the "little pill" fraternity challenge comparison with the very brightest lights of the calomel and quinine practice. If the homœopaths multiply as rapidly during the next twenty-five years as during the last twenty-five they will turn the tables and will themselves constitute the "regular" school.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

NINTH WEEK.

Roads are wet where 'ere one wendeth,
And with rain the thistle bendeth,
And the brook cries like a child;
Not a rainbow shines to cheer us;
Ah; the sun comes never near us,
And the heavens look dark and wild.
—MARY HOWITT.

Had you seen these roads before they were made,
You'd lift up your hands and bless Gen. Wade.
CAPTAIN GROSS.

"You see, young man," said Columbus, as he mopped his brow with a red bandanna, and took a chew of fine-cut about the size of a black walnut. "You see things runs differently when I'm boss. I'm not driven to death with drudgery. I have time to calkillate the work, and if Ellic don't improve his time I know it. Ellic will make quite a boy yet. It's pretty tough on my shoe leather sometimes, but I expect to sacrifice somethin' to have the work go along. Now then, there's two things that must be did this week. The sheep must be washed and the road taxes must be worked out. My rheumatiz will prevent me from goin' into the water, but we can drive the sheep over to neighbor Hilton's and hire the boy to help Ellic wash 'em. I can set on the bank and count the sheep and see that the boys wash 'em properly. The pathmaster told me yesterday that he should warn us out some day this week to work on the road. I'm achin' to get at the road work. I've made hundreds o' miles of highway over'n Canada. I tell you I'm happy when ridin' on a load of gravel or watchin' a scraper. I served as pathmaster of our district over'n Canada for ten years in succession, and the honor was well bestowed too, if I do say it myself. Why, there aint nothing about highway work, from warnin' the neighbors out to puttin' a culvert in place that I don't know all about. I've bin there, young man, time and agin. And in the office of pathmaster my nat'ral genius for bossin' finds unrestricted range. Give me a gang of a dozen men, four teams, two scrapers and a good dog, and I can roll up a new highway with a vengeance. I have A hold the plow, and B hold it down. I have C hold the scraper, D drive a team, and E dump the dirt. I have F do the shovelin,' G the levelin', H the unloadin', J the draggin', K the rollin, L the swearin', and I do the overseein' myself. With such a combination the worst road in christendom can be made as level as a billiard table. I've talked this business all over with the pathmaster, have got him to give me a start, and I'm goin to do our 'leven days work in just one day and a-half." The road work was done according to program and several other things too.

Monday, May 30th.—Columbus went to mill for some groceries and got a hame strap mended at the harness shop. He set Ellic at cultivating in the early potato patch, while he mixed up some plaster and ashes, Paris green and sulphur with which to dose the potato bugs. A heavy shower went over about noon. After the rain was over the two cleaned out the kitchen cistern. Columbus went down below and Ellic hauled out the water with a tin pail tied to a bed cord. As Ellic was not an adept at handling water, about half of every other pail full was tipped back into the cistern. Ichabod came out ten times during the two hours to give Ellic a bootiug. No other incident happened except that the Captain fell in and was pulled out by the neck.

Tuesday, May 31st.—Columbus and Ellic drove the sheep to neighbor Hilton's to wash. Ichabod dare not go into the water on account of his rheumatism, so he bossed the job from the bank of the creek and let Ellic and Wallace do the washing. One of the lambs tipped into the stream and was drowned. Another smart shower after dinner. In the afternoon, Columbus did a heavy half day's work at tinkering. He plugged up a hole in the flour barrel, ground the carving knife, put down a bed room carpet, picked over a mess of beans for to-morrow's dinner, helped his wife do the churning, hung four hams in the smokehouse, rocked on the baby's toes, filled his tobacco box, ground some coffee for breakfast, brushed the rain water out of his hair, and kissed the hired girl. Ellic did nothing but saw and split wood.

Wednesday, June 1st.—It rained all the forenoon. The boys swept out the carriage house, cooped up a hen that had stolen her nest and come off with one chicken, put a cracker on the whip lash and greased the buggy. The path-master called at noon and warned us out on the road, and I improved the opportunity without a murmur. Both boys went, with the team and wagon, the Captain and Tiger, and hauled gravel during the afternoon. The good old-fashioned plan of plowing up the middle of the highway and converting it into a continuous mud hole about two feet deep has been discontinued in our district. A good coat of gravel is drawn on every spring and in five years' time we shall have the best roads in the county.

Thursday, June 2d.—All hands worked on the road all day. I owed seven days work to complete my tax, and Columbus struck a bargain with the pathmaster in the morning to gravel ten rods of highway and take a receipt in full. The way the gravel flew then was a caution. Ichabod broke the handle out of the shovel, booted Ellic six times, and snapped the evener in the middle. Columbus had his stint completed at sundown, although he had to buy one new boot to replace the one that he wore up on Ellic.

Friday, June 3d.—A dreary, drizzly wet rain all the forenoon. Ellic washed the buggy and made half a dozen wooden nest eggs. Columbus wrote an essay on "Highways, their Uses and the proper Method of Improving them," to read at the next meeting of the Grange. Ichabod, by the way, is an enthusiastic Granger. He can write essays on any subject and deliver impromptu speeches by the hour. In the afternoon he punched two rows of holes for cabbage plants across the garden and Ellic set the plants.

Saturday, June 4th—Another shower in the morning. Columbus got the horses shod and had Ellic cut enough wood to last over Sunday. In the afternoon the boys greased harness and kept the kitchen stove warm.

If you want your roads worked, so they're splendid to travel,
Just hook up your horses and draw on the gravel;
And if, in the effort, you come to a hitch,
Columbus will fetch it, or die in the ditch.

Marked improvements are being made this summer at the Bay View camp ground near Petoskey. The railroad way from Petoskey to Bay View is cleared and surfaced, Sunset Park is cleaned and fenced, and a fountain placed within it; the hotel and speaker's stand are painted, a new restaurant is built, a flag station and platform established at Reed avenue on the north part of the ground; timber cross-walks are laid across streets and a fence has been built enclosing the entire premises south of the highway. These improvements will add very much to the attractiveness of that already popular summer home.

GOD SPEED.

Fields of untold wealth; mines of unsounded depth; pasturages without end; health giving climate and sparkling waters; raw materials in abundance for the fiery furnace, the weaver and the spinner, the metal worker and the artistic jeweler; entrancing views for the lover of nature and the beautiful inspiring alike to the artist's soul and brush and the mind and pen of the literateur; meat for the millions, bread for the toilers of the land; fortune and position for the workers with willing hearts and hands; such are advantages Colorado presents to the World at large, and the approaching opening of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad through line to Denver, directly linking Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Peoria, Des Moines, Atchison, the progressive cities of the growing West, to the Queen of the Rockies, will bring home to the masses, the opportunity perhaps long sought for to explore this famous region.

From the cotton plains of the South and her seductive sugar fields, from the spinning mills of New England, the iron furnaces of Pennsylvania, the marts of commerce of the East and the Old World a new avenue is opened. The manufacturer, the merchant, the tourist, the invalid, the student, the miner, the laborer, all have an interest in the new enterprise fostered and brought to successful issue by the most admirably managed and most advanced railroad corporation of our time. To them it means increase of business, increase of pleasure, improved health, new fields and new scenes, fresh opportunities, advancement and progress.

And while these steel bands will unite new sections of the world into a closer and more intimate relation as regards business and personal welfare, it will also unite hearts and minds, foster new acquaintances, new relations and create for many a new hearthstone, a home in the land of promise.

We hail with unfeigned pleasure the first trip of the iron horse, that greatest of helper to advanced civilization, across the virgin soil of that wonderful land and bid God-speed to the projectors while awaiting the formal announcement that the new line is opened for passenger traffic, and the banner of the "Great Burlington Route" floats at the base of the Rockies.

I. Ship Speaks of His Wife.

Indianapolis, Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: My wife has for several years been a great sufferer from periodical attacks of Neuralgia in the head. Several of the most eminent physicians had been called upon to treat her, but they could only give temporary relief.

About two years ago she commenced using the Taxarine, and I am gratified to say, since then she has had no recurrence of those terrible pains. I attribute her restoration to health entirely to the use of Taxarine, and in conclusion would say to all who suffer that excrutiating of all pains to give Taxarine a trial. Yours etc. - I. Ship.

Do Not Be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and one that will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by all druggists.

They will begin business under the most favorable auspices, and with the confidence and good wishes of the business community. We prophesy their success.

MIKE HAMILL came to town yesterday and started for home about five o'clock with a large load of whiskey in his alimentary canal and two extra bottles full in his coat pocket. When we went to supper at six, we found him sitting under an oak tree in our front yard taking a rest. Shortly after he made another start for home and got as far as the porch on the north side of our house where he halted for another rest. Jap Plank went to the village and got officers Smith and Stevens, but when they arrived Mike was so fatigued that he could not navigate a step. So Jap hitched up the spring wagon, backed it up to the portico, made a bridge into the wagon box with the ironing board, rolled old Mike endways into the wagon and took him to the cooler. He was brought up this morning, and fined $10 and costs, and in default of payment was sent over the road for 20 days.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

THE NECESSARY ARRANGEMENTS PROGRESSING FOR A GRAND CELEBRATION.

The Officers and Special Committees Appointed—Some of the Attractions Already Secured.

Tecumseh is somewhat noted for the harmony and unanimity with which her citizens enter into any enterprise. The project which has been started of celebrating the coming Fourth is proving no exception to the rule. From the day the first committee was appointed until now the arrangements have been steadily progressing and the success of the celebration is already assured. We give below the situation of affairs at the present writing showing what has been already accomplished. The executive committee have held several meetings during the past two weeks, and the preliminary part of the work has been well done.

In the first place we have a good solid financial foundation to build on. A fund of $500 has been pledged to pay expenses which insures the best of assistance in all departments.

The silver-tongued orator of Michigan—Col. May—will deliver the address.

The Adrian K. T. band in full uniform and with their full complement of eighteen pieces will furnish street music.

There will be a liberal display of bunting on Chicago street. People who witnessed the beautiful decorations here two years ago know what a fine opportunity we have for making a splendid display.

In the line of minor amusements there will be a long list of attractions.

There will be a bicycle race by Irv. Finch and Chas. Wesinger, of Adrian, with a display of fancy bicycle riding, foot races, glass ball shooting, sack races and other similar amusements in profusion.

There will also be some fine trotting and racing on the track during the afternoon, but this part of the program will be independent of the regular exercises.

Arrangements are in progress to have a broom brigade drill and contest at the Opera House, but the details of this have not yet been perfected.

A prominent feature of the day's festivities will be the grand parade of the Mardi Gras Cavalcade which will eclipse anything of the kind ever seen in this county. Prizes will be offered for the most fantastic costumes, and a special fund has been pledged to defray the expenses of a big display in this department.

We present herewith the list of officers and committees chosen, and the program in full. The details of this program may be varied somewhat but it will be followed out substantially as here given:

OFFICERS.

President—Rev. R. S. Pardington.

Vice Presidents—J. P. Slayton, Tecumseh; W. Comfort, Raisin; Dr. G. Howell, Macon; D. W. Love, Franklin; G. P. Waring, Ridgeway; E. W. Freese, Clinton; Samuel Morey, Cambridge; Jay Hoag, Adrian.

Treasurer—Chas. A. Slayton.

Marshal—A. W. Mills.

Aids—C. A. Slayton, S. W. Bordine, T. C. Cummins, P. S. McKinnon, Tecumseh; J. H. Green, Raisin; John Britton, Ridgeway; Sam Rappleye, Macon; LeRoy Mills, Franklin; Frank Lancaster, Clinton.

COMMITTEES.

On Fireworks—J. Davidson, R. B. House, A. James, C. M. Burlingame, S. W. Bordine, Geo. A. Kies.

On Decoration—H. W. Stevens, S. P. Hosmer, P. S. McKinnon, Mrs. H. S. Lee, Mrs. C. S. Patterson, Miss Anna Groves, Miss Hattie Stevens.

On Grounds—J. W. Cole.

On Speaker—Tom Adamson.

On Music—S. P. Hosmer, J. Davidson, John Heck, A. B. Cotton.

On Printing—H. W. Stevens, S. P. Hosmer.

On Amusements—S. P. Hosmer, J. W. Cole, H. W. Stevens.

On Reception—The Common Council of the village.

General Program.

National Salute at sunrise.

At 9 o'clock, a. m., the procession will form on Chicago street and march to Bill's grove, where the literary and musical exercises will be given.

Music—Adrian K. T. band.
Invocation—Rev. W. H. Babbitt.
Opening address by the President.
Vocal Music—Glee Club.
Prayer—Rev. C. E. Conley.
Music—Adrian band.
Reading of the Declaration—Rev. J. Phelps.
Vocal Music—Glee Club.
Oration—Hon. Chas. S. May.
Music—Glee Club.
Benediction—Rev. H. Shepard.
Basket picnic.

AFTERNOON.

At twelve o'clock sharp the grand fantastic cavalcade under command of Capt. J. Davidson, will form at the west end of Logan street, and headed by the band will march down Chicago street to Bill's race track where the out-door sports will be held. Three prizes will be offered for the most outlandish rigs, of $3, $2 and $1 each.

Parties who intend joining the cavalcade are requested to report their names at once to Jehiel Davidson, that the committee may have an abundance of time to procure masks and other paraphernalia for the occasion. All business firms who may wish to do so are invited to rig up their vehicles and join the procession.

Sack race immediately after.

At 2 o'clock Finch and Wesinger will give an exhibition of fancy bicycle riding including the various mounts and dismounts, also introducing many original and daring tricks in single and combination acts, to be followed by a bicycle race.

The committee are in correspondence with Elsie Von Blumen and hope to secure her assistance in the bicycle race.

At 2:30 a walking match between Prof. Ambrose Hunter and two Tecumseh walkists. This will be followed by a free for all foot race, once round the track, for a prize of $5.00.

At 3 o'clock the exercises will be concluded by a grand display of Japanese Fireworks. These are a new thing entirely and consist of mammoth representations fired high in the air, and showing figures of popular subjects such as Washington, American Eagle, Goddess of Liberty, Animals, Parasols, Japanese caricatures of Men, Women, Horses, Ships, &c., to the wonderment and curiosity of all beholders. They will include also a great variety of shells that from a high altitude open and throw down showers of Japanese curiosities, to be secured by the assemblage as souvenirs of the occasion.

At the conclusion of the exercises at the race track the horsemen will take possession and several trots will be had, the particulars of which will be given elsewhere.

At 4 o'clock the scene will be shifted to the Opera House where the broom brigade drill and contest will take place. Three cash prizes will be offered for the best drilled brigade and it is expected that the Ypsilanti, Morenci, Adrian and Tecumseh broom brigades will participate, and possibly others. The details of this affair are not yet completed, and hence no more particulars can be given now.

Between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening there will be a magnificent display of fireworks. The stand will be erected on Chicago street below Ottawa, facing toward the west. The collection will embrace the usual assortment of candles, rockets, etc., with many novelties never shown before, and a number of Harris's celebrated meteoric balloons. It will far surpass anything of the kind ever seen in this village.

The railroad company will carry passengers at half fare rates, and it is expected that a special train will be secured to run up from Adrian about nine o'clock in the forenoon and return in the evening after the fireworks.

From the above imperfect description of the attractions which will be presented here on the coming Fourth our readers can easily see that we are bound to have a "big time" and that the program will be one worth coming many miles to see. There will be entertainment for the old and the young, the grave and gay, without regard to sex or previous condition, and all who come will be welcomed. If the clerk of the weather will vouchsafe a pleasant day we shall certainly have a tremendous celebration.

RACES ON THE FOURTH.

On the afternoon of the Fourth, at the completion of the sports under the direction of the regular celebration committee, a few races will take place under the management of Mr. C. D. Bills. He authorizes us to give the following program. Independently of the prizes given by the committee on amusements he offers these purses for trotting and running:

CLASS NO. 1.

For stallions owned and making the season in the county. Purse $15,00; 1st $10; 2d, $5.

CLASS NO. 2.

Free to all, best 3 in 5 mile heats. Purse $15; 1st, 10; 2d, $5.

CLASS NO. 3.

Four-year old race. Best 2 in 3, mile heats. Purse, $15,00; 1st, $10; 2d, $5.

CLASS NO. 4.

For horse trotting nearest to four minutes, single mile, Purse $10,00; 1st, $7,50; 2d, $2,50.

CLASS NO. 5.

Running half mile dash. Purse $15; 1st, $10; 2d, $5.

Entrance fee ten per cent. of the purse. Entries will close July 3d at 6 P. M. Races will be called at 3 P. M. on the Fourth. Admission to the grounds, 25 cents. All applications for entry should be addressed to C. D. Bills.

The delicate, emaciated and infirm find perfect health, sure strength and youthful buoyancy in Brown's Iron Bitters.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Closing Session on Thursday Afternoon—Full Text of the Constitution Adopted.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The Session opened with singing by the choir and prayer by Rev. J. A. Bartlett.

Rev. M. D. Carrel reported a constitution and by-laws, which, after a few amendments were made, was adopted.

Rev. S. K. Spahr offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

WHEREAS, The Sunday school workers of the state have been invited to meet in convention at this place, and have been so cordially received and so handsomely entertained by the citizens, therefore,

Resolved, first That the thanks of this convention are due the friends who have invited us into their homes and given us such royal hospitality, and,

Resolved, second, That we now, by a rising vote, express to these good people our hearty appreciation and sincere thanks for their kindness and generosity.

The thanks of the convention were tendered to the Tecumseh HERALD, the Adrian Times and the Evening News for reporting the proceedings, and also to the pastors, choir and floral committee.

Dr. Vincent then addressed the convention upon "The Teaching Process." It was a fine effort and one of the best features of the sessions.

The Secretary stated that Lenawee county had pledged $50 for the benefit of the State Association.

The session then closed with the benediction by Rev. J. L. Hudson.

In the evening Dr. Vincent delivered his lecture upon "The Church of the Future" to a crowded house, and thus ended the meetings of the twenty-second annual assembly of the State Sunday School Association.

The weather was all that any one could ask for, and the presence of many prominent Sunday school workers rendered the convention exceedingly interesting and instructive from first to last. It was conceded to have been the most successful meeting of the association ever held.

The constitution is given below:

ART. 1.—Name.—This association shall be called the Mich. State Sunday School Association.

ART. 2.—Membership.—Every Sunday school within the bounds of the state making an annual contribution to the funds of the association shall be entitled to one delegate. And every county association duly organized to three delegates. The delegates thus appointed shall constitute the membership of the association.

ART. 3.—Object.—The object of this association shall be the promotion of the general Sunday school interests of the state, giving special attention to the gathering of S. S. statistics, to the thorough organization of the counties, and to the holding of Institutes for the training of teachers.

ART. 4.—Meeting.—The regular meeting of the Association shall be held annually; time and place to be fixed by the executive committee, unless they shall be previously determined by the Association in convention assembled.

ART. 5.—Officers.—The officers of the Association shall consist of a president, three vice presidents, corresponding secretary and assistant, treasurer, and executive committee consisting of the president, vice presidents, corresponding secretary and one person from each congressional district.

ART. 6.—Duties of Officers.—Sec. 1.—The president shall preside at the annual conventions, and in his absence one of the vice presidents will occupy the chair.

Sec. 2.—The corresponding secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of each meeting, attend to the gathering and arranging of statistics and such correspondence as the interests of the Association shall demand.

Sec. 3.—The assistant secretary shall render the corresponding secretary such assistance as may be needful.

Sec. 4.—The treasurer shall keep a faithful account of all moneys collected and disbursed, and report the same at the annual convention.

Sec. 5.—The executive committee shall arrange for the annual conventions of the association, and such other meetings as shall be for the best interests of the State work. They shall audit accounts of the secretary and treasurer and give general directions in the making of contracts and payment of money. They shall fill any vacancy caused by death or removal, and have power to suspend any officer for neglecting his work, and appoint another in his place.

ART. 7.—Funds.—The funds of the Association shall be raised by contributions from the schools, as provided in Article 2nd, and in such other ways as the executive committee shall from time to time devise.

ART. 8.—Election of Officers.—At each annual meeting a committee shall be appointed to nominate the officers to be elected by the Association.

ART. 9.—This Association shall be auxilliary to the International convention, and shall by its secretary make annual report to the statistical secretary of the same, and be represented by delegates in the Triennial Convention.

ART. 10.—Alterations or Amendments.—This constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the delegates present at any annual convention.

THE Graduating Exercises of the Tecumseh High School will take place on Thursday evening of next week at the Opera House. A class of nine young ladies will graduate, and the exercises bid fair to be of more than usual interest. The program is an excellent one in both its literary and musical features, and our citizens can rely upon an evening's entertainment which will undoubtedly call out a crowded house.

Overdid It.

"Why, of course you want a telephone put in your house," said the canvasser to the business man; "it will be so handy when your wife wants to talk to you."

"There," exclaimed the business man, picking up a stool, "that will do. I listened to you when you urged the point that I could order provisions from the butcher, and I looked with favor on your representations that it would afford unequalled facilities for ordering in the beer, but when you tell me that the only rest I get during the day is going to be ruthlessly busted into through the medium of a galvanized tin-type, then it is time you was breathing your atmosphere into other ears. You may make yourself less adjacent, young man."

The Modern Delivery Clerk.

The post-office delivery clerk is an official paid by the government of the United States to make the traveling public, and those who have not got lock boxes paid for quarterly in advance, feel that there are worse things than not getting the letters they expected. The worse things are the delivery clerk himself and the manner in which he treats the anxious inquiry. There is no impetuous haste about the movements of the delivery-clerk, but, instead, there is a calm repose of manner and leisurely disregard of time, as he turns to his pigeon holes to look for a letter for you, and, becoming interested in the reading of a postal card, [illegible] all about your business.

We heard a man say the other day, that the average delivery clerk is of a retiring disposition; he will retire behind a desk for half an hour to finish reading the catastrophe of a Seaside Library novel, while the unlettered public howl like foghorns outside, and pound on the sides of the windows with their sticks and umbrellas.

The post-office delivery clerk is really a very mild and inoffensive creature—when he is dead or discharged. In his official capacity, however, he is not excessively communicative or oppressively polite. He never comes out of his window to chat with a friend or to point out to a stranger the way to the court house. There are several characteristics and eccentricities of the delivery clerk that may be worth mentioning. He will look at the inquiring one in a pre-occupied sort of way and when the latter states that his name is J. F. Wilson, and asks if there are any letters for him, the clerk will go into a reverie over about forty letters that he will fish out of the W box. After he examines them all and has had ten minutes of a joint discussion with the first assistant mailing clerk with regard to whether the second throw that Smith made last night was two sixes and a three or two threes and a six, he will then look over a few more letters, until he comes to one that looks as if it might fit the man outside, and coming to the widow says, "You are sure your name isn't J. P. Williams, are you?" as if Wilson might have lost or mislaid his name and unconsciously picked up some other man's name by mistake, as one might exchange a hat or an umbrella. When the man assures him that his name, as well as he can remember, is Wilson, the clerk looks disgusted and disappointed because he is again balked in disposing of some of his stale literature.

The most exasperating specimen of delivery clerk is the one who has the reputation of having a remarkable memory. He remembers, or pretends to remember, the names of all the letters in all the pigeon holes from A to Z, and we never saw a man yet who wouldn't doubt the accuracy of his statement when, without looking through his stock of letters, he says: "Naw, nothing for that name."

Young Rats Nursed by a Cat.

A few years ago, when visiting a neighbor's house, it was mentioned in the course of conversation that there was then on the premises a singular case of a cat having adopted children from a nest of one of her natural victims. On my expressing a wish to witness this phenomenon, I was at once taken to the stable yard, and there shown a fine female cat nursing a family composed of two kittens and two handsome young rats, the whole four living in perfect harmony. On my inquiring the history of this remarkable group, I was informed by the coachman in charge, that shortly after the cat-mother had given birth to a litter of kittens, she had been deprived by him of all but three. The mother evidently did not approve of this reduction in her family, became restless for a time, and, on her again settling down, it was discovered she had replaced one of her murdered children by a tame young rat. Seeing this, and knowing that cats were too numerous to please the gamekeeper, the coachman determined to destroy one of the three remaining kittens, which was done. On the following morning the coachman, on visiting the cat's nursery, was not a little surprised to discover that the mother, in lieu of her murdered off-spring, had introduced into her nursery a second young rat.

The two kittens, in company with the two rats, had been impartially nursed, and were, when I saw them, living in perfect harmony. They were at that time about two months old, and were residing together in an old wine case, with a piece of wire netting thrown over the top. The young rats were pretty-looking, sleek creatures, with bright brown eyes, and evidently well nourished. They were, however, of different dispositions, for while the one would with confidence return the visitor's gaze, the other disliked being looked at by strangers, and would, on the approach of the latter, make rather frantic endeavors to conceal itself amongst the fur of its foster mother.

I afterward learned, I regret to say, that the family party was broken up in an abrupt and unsatisfactory manner. The friendly coachman had left his situation. The cat-mother had given way to some poaching proclivities, and during a nocturnal ramble had been caught and killed in one of the gamekeeper's traps. The kittens and young rats were thereafter thrown friendless on the world, and left no trace behind them.

A Wise Conclusion.

A valiant young man went down from Yonkers to York to enlist in the militia. Adorned with youth, beauty, and a new silk hat, he presented himself to the recruiting-officer, and stated his errand. The battle-scarred veteran looked solemnly at him, and said, "Suppose, sir, that you were in command of a company; that in your rear was an impassable abyss; that on either side of you arose a perpendicular precipice a hundred feet in height; that in front of you stood the enemy, ten times your number—young man, what would you do?" "General," said the embryonic hero, without a moment's hesitation, "General, I should resign!"

Woman In Russia.

In Russia, where in the middle classes the seclusion of women was, even a few years ago, nearly as great as in a harem, the advocates of women's rights would find little to demand for any class of females above the level of the peasantry. The moujik still administers corporal chastisement to his wife, as he would to his child, and his right to do so, though denied by the written law, is tacitly acknowledged in practice. The girl, however, whose brother has been described as going to the Lycee, and subsequently to the university, is nearly as independent as her male relations. Like her brother, and from similar causes, she too often becomes disgusted with her home, and determined to seek what she imagines to be the delights of the independent life led by the numerous female students who follow various university courses, and particularly that of medicine. Sometimes, when her parents refuse her permission to leave home, she simply runs away, and, having no passport, her position at once becomes illegal, and she naturally finds her companions among those who, like herself, have got into some trouble with the authorities. In some cases enthusiasts like Soloviff, who fired at the late Czar in April, 1879, marry girls with whom they have scarcely any acquaintance, and for whom they have no feeling of affection, merely to free them from the obligation of obtaining a passport from their parents, and their consent to leave home. The young husband and wife proceed together to the university town, and there, having no particular use for each other's society, they often separate immediately, and even where they would desire to maintain their mutual connection, the pressure of poverty and the difficulties of their position frequently oblige them to part company.

Even without the specially demoralizing effect of such circumstances as I have just mentioned, the general influences of life at the universities are not injurious to the majority of young women who frequent them. The ideas of family ties and of the obligations of married life which prevail in the homes of the students are probably lax enough, but even these are cast to the winds by the young men and women who adopt a code of morals of their own in the Bohemian society of which they have become members. Parental authority, which a few years ago was such a marked feature in domestic life in Russia, has become a thing of the past as far as regards the majority of the students, and university and Government officials are equally condemned. The mystic reverence for the Czar appears absurd to the young philosophers, and the church itself is despised by those who have learnt to recognize the ignorance of its ministers, and the superstition with which its rites are practiced by the ignorant masses.—Fortnightly Review.

Which Was the Madman?

The late Dr. Brierre de Boismont had for some forty years one of the best known of Parisian madhouses, and he was a friend of all the artistic and literary celebrities of his time, who dined with him frequently, the latter often for the purpose of making visits at the various stages and sorts of insanity. One day an animated discussion took place between the doctor and a rich banker, who held that madness could be easily detected, even by a non-expert.

"On the contrary," said the doctor, "I have a dozen patients in my keeping who, outside of their pet idea, are as sane and sensible as you, or at least seem to be as sane and sensible as you are. I will make a wager that I will introduce you to a small dinner party at which one of the guests will be one of my most hopeless cases, and that you will pass the evening without discovering him."

"Done," said the banker, and the dinner was set for the next Monday night. When the party was about to break up, the doctor approached the banker, and asked, with a smile:

"Well, did you discover the madman?"

"Discover the madman!" echoed the banker, with a contemptuous curl of the lip. "Why, I picked him out before we had been at the table five minutes—the man on your left! Any one could do it after hearing him talk about his chimerical enterprises, which were to yield him fabulous sums. Mad as a March hare! I could not help remarking as much to the gentleman who sat beside me."

"Which one?"

"The one on my left—a very quiet, gentlemanly, well-informed man, too. Who was he?"

"O, he was the madman!" The gentleman on my left was the novelist, Honore de Balzac!"

The Microscope.

Nothing amuses the children more than a miscroscope. A good one costs anywhere from fifty to a hundred dollars. Do without a parlor carpet, and buy one. Or a sealskin jacket. The boy or girl who has a passion for "bugs," or for botanizing, or for the study of geology, or for dissecting animals from a mouse to a rabbit, will hardly go astray, or find some stupid, if the passion is appreciated and not frowned upon. Again, it is extremely useful in other ways. Suppose, for example, that the lady of the house wishes to know whether the piece of silk she has set her heart upon is all silk, or a mixture with cotton, jute or China grass, and, if all silk, whether it has been loaded with dye and dressing. The microscope will set her mind at rest. Take a pattern of the silk, unravel the warp and weft, and examine it under the quarter-inch objective, and you will, at any rate, see whether all fine little fibers, of which the weft and warp are comprised, look alike. That, of course, will not tell you whether the material is silk; but if you procure a piece of known silk, good, raw silk, and study its appearance, and compare it with the suspected specimen, you will come to a sound conclusion very soon. Study the peculiarities of hair or wool, and you will soon be able to tell whether your coat or cloak is all wool or not.

Indian Wives.

Among the Northwestern tribes of Indians, innocence is as marked among the girls as their color. The impression that the red maiden does not entertain a high standard of morality is an error, for she is taught as other girls are, and grows up with well-developed ideas of the responsibilities of life and a firm resolution to discharge them. Educated in the faith that she was born to work, she trains herself to undergo hard labor, and at 16 years of age is sturdy and strong, brave against fatigue, and a perfect housewife.

She may not possess New England notions of cleanliness, but she takes not a little pride in her personal appearance, and in the arrangement of her lodge she displays some crude ideas of taste and a certain amount of neatness. If she marries a white man she makes him a good wife as long as she lives with him. His home is her sole comfort, and his comfort her sole ambition. She thinks of him and for him, and makes it her study to please him and make him respect and love her. She recognizes in him one of a superior race, and by her dignity and devotion endears herself to him and struggles to make him happy.

At the agencies of the upper frontier thousands of men are employed, and it is not an exaggeration to say that the majority of them have Indian wives and live happily. They are not sought after by the maidens, for the Indian girl's custom is to remain quiet until the marriage contract is made and the marriage portion paid over. The husband must have the dowry, with which he must invest his projected mother-in-law before the ceremony takes place. The process is a little out of the usual run, and a description may be of interest.

The aspiring bridegroom must be well known in the tribe before he can hope to win a wife. Her people want to thoroughly understand him, and know if he can support not only her but also her relatives in the event of a pinch. He must be a kind-hearted man, with a temper warranted to keep in any domestic climate, and he must have a good lodge and at least half a dozen horses. If he be, and have all these, he can a-wooing go. Selecting the lady, he makes application to her mother, and at a council the price is fixed upon.

If the girl is especially pretty her mother will demand a gun, two horses, and a lot of provisions, blankets, and cloth. A gun is valued at $50, a horse at $20, and he must furnish material enough to bring the amount up to from $100 to $150. Then he tries to beat the dame down, and if he succeeds he knows there is some reason for letting the girl go; if not, he understands that he is making a good choice. The courtship is left entirely to the mother.—San Francisco Chronicle.

New Wrinkle of the Hated Book-Agent.

It is stated that an agent from the North recently visited our city to canvass for the sale of a certain book. He visited the residences of a number of our citizens, and where he did not make actual cash sales, as was the case in a number of instances, he asked permission to leave the book for examination, promising to call by subsequently and get it, in the event it was not desired to keep the volume. Whether or not he was prevented from calling for the book is not known, but the book was left with some ten or a dozen citizens, and a bill for $10 against each of them was placed in the hands of the High Constable for collection. This officer was not aware of the circumstances until he presented some of the bills, when he was informed in each case no purchase of the book had been made, nor any bargain entered into with the agent, but on the contrary the volume had been left with them under the promise that it would soon be called for. Several of the gentlemen against whom these bills had been presented expressed the desire to interview the agent and give him a gentle expression of their opinion of his conduct, but he is not in the city—having returned to the North.—Petersburg (Va.) Index-Appeal.

An Honest Preparation.

The world is so crammed with swindles that a really honest man or honest thing is almost as scarce as robins in January. Yet Mr. J. H. Northrop, of Lansingburg, N. WARNER'S SAFE

KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concections said to be just as good.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.

IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,080.11. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 181 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 362 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. Domestic Recipes.

Hominy Fritters.—Two cups cold boiled hominy, small-grained; one tablespoonful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of cream, two beaten eggs, one-half teaspoonful soda dissolved in vinegar, a little salt. Rub the sugar and salt into the hominy, wet with the milk, and when smooth beat in the whipped eggs; drop by the spoonful into boiling fat, and fry quickly. Drain in a hot colander. Every thing depends upon beating and cooking. The soda should go in last of all the ingredients, and be whipped in hard.

Browned Potatoes.—Mash soft, with butter and milk; mound smoothly upon a greased plate, and brown in a quick oven, glazing with butter. Slip to a hot flat dish.

Lettuce Salad.—Pull out the hearts and pick them apart. Heap loosely in a salad-bowl, and season, first sprinkling lightly with powdered sugar, with oil, vinegar, salt, and pepper. Toss up with a silver fork; lay cold boiled eggs, cut into sixths, lengthwise upon the top.

Deviled Kidneys.—Wash a pound of sheep's or pig's kidneys, dry them on a towel, and split them open without entirely separating the two halves; spread them thinly with a paste made as follows, and broil them over a brisk fire until they are brown.

Paste for Deviled Kidneys.—Mix together one tablespoonful each of dry mustard, flour, and vinegar, one saltspoonful of salt, quarter of a saltspoonful of white pepper, and a dust of cayenne pepper.

Broiled Kidneys.—Wash, dry, and split the kidneys as above; dip them in the following mixture of oil and vinegar; run a small skewer through each one to keep it open, and broil four minutes on each side, or until the kidneys are brown, placing the inside first over the fire. The seasoning mixture for the kidneys is made by mixing together three tablespoonfuls of salad-oil, one tablespoonful of vinegar, a saltspoonful of salt, and quarter of a saltspoonful of pepper.

Every cook who makes tea or coffee in tin pots, knows that after a few months her results are not the same as when the pots are new. If she can afford it, she throws them away and buys new ones. They can be cleansed in a very simple manner, and so last a longer time. Put enough water in to nearly fill them, and then drop a few live coals in the water; gases are absorbed, and the coffee or teapot is fresh and almost as good as new.

Salt in Diphtheria.—In a paper read at the Medical Society of Victoria, Australia, Dr. Day stated that, having for many years regarded diphtheria, in its early stage, as a purely local affection, characterized by a marked tendency to take on putrefactive decomposition, he has trusted most to the free and constant application of antiseptics, and, when their employment has been adopted from the first, and been combined with judicious alimentation, he has seldom seen blood-poisoning ensue. In consequence of the great power which salt possesses in preventing the putrefactive decomposition of meat and other organic matter, Dr. Day has often prescribed for diphtheritic patients living far away from medical aid the frequent use of a gargle composed of a teaspoonful or more of salt dissolved in a tumbler of water, giving children who cannot gargle a teaspoonful or two to drink occasionally. Adults to use the gargle as a prophylactic or preventive three or four times a day.

[illegible] muslin or [illegible] for summer curtains, says Harper's Bazar. For simple sash curtains the sprigged or dotted patterns or those with large rings or daisies wrought in them are used without borders, while for the flowing curtains there is a vine or striped border and scalloped edges down the inner sides and across the bottom. The square meshed canvas or grenadine curtains are seen in many of the handsomest residences for both curtains—those fixed in shape next the sash and for the flowing curtains behind it. The trimming for these is insertion and lace; either Cluny or the antique lace is preferred, and sometimes the showy Russian lace is used. The scrim curtains have very much the same effect as grenadine curtains, and are much less expensive. Colored embroidery in artistic designs has been added to these white curtains, forming sometimes a dado or else a border on two sides, and occasionally there are small figures wrought all over the curtain. For those who like more color the Madras muslins are commended, with their gold, olive or robin's egg blue grounds, strewn with flowers of gay colors. These come in beautifully blended colors that give almost the effect of stained glass. Momie cloth, made of cotton, has taken the place of cretonne for cottage parlors and chambers, because it is found to be more durable.

Cornices and lambrequins are abandoned. Poles of wood or gilt, with rings to which the curtains are attached, are used for curtains of all kinds, whether thin or thick, muslin or lace, cotton or damask. The rings are sewed directly to the hem at the top of the curtain, or else they are attached by little clamps that have been made for this purpose. In the place of lambrequins, there are sometimes valances, or the Queen Anne cap, made of a straight width of plush, felt or other stuff, simply edged with gimp or fringe, placed smoothly across the top of the widow, and from beneath this fall the muslin or lace curtains.

Professor Law says that "the great majority of ringbones in young horses come from the failure to shorten the toes." To this may be added that ringbone is apt to be formed if colts are allowed to stand on a plank floor, or anywhere else where the footing is hard during the first eighteen months of their age. Whether in stable or yard during this period, let them have earth for standing or walking free from stone or gravel.

An Impossibility.

Deserving articles are always appreciated. The exceptional cleanliness of Parker's Hair Balsam makes it popular. Gray hairs are impossible with its occasional use.

Robert Collyer on How to Raise Children.

It was one of the secrets of my craft, in the old times, when I wanted to weld iron and steel and make a good ax and hammer, to begin gently, for I found out in time that if I began to strike hard at first I might make a bad job where I ought to make a good one. So I found it was the first condition of good work to begin gently, then by and by I could come down with a more forcible stroke. And I used to notice this trouble in the great iron mills, and I found that the reason why the great hammers could come down so gently as not to crack an egg, and then come down like an earthquake, was that there must be in the machinery a combination of force and gentleness to make it effective. Machinery in the hands of the mechanic was his child in a certain sense. If there was a screw loose he got a little purchase to turn it to the right, and so at last it worked well and there was no trouble. Gentleness was master of the situation. So, said the preacher, I have watched the development of little children. There must be a right way and a wrong way to train little children. They must not seem to us like wrought iron, or brutes that we can break to our will. Children are tender; you must lead them tenderly on. Solomon's doctrine "Spare the rod and spoil the child" is an abhorrent doctrine—a doctrine that I will not have about my house. I took it out of my eldest son when he was a little fellow, thinking he had told me a lie, and I felt as if some one would take it out of me, and I found at the end of the week that the child had told me the exact and simple truth. We should cultivate the virtue of the wisdom of infinite love with little children. Children are not things, but human beings possessing power we cannot even guess at. We bend over these little ones and seek our image in them. If we detect a fault we probably say: "Oh, he has taken that from his mother." We always walk softly when we don't know our way, and particularly when we walk in shadows. The child is tender; we should lead on softly. Hold your hand; if you must whip somebody turn the lash to your own shoulder. Don't sap the flower in their lives by trying to pluck out the weeds. A great many fathers and mothers lay heavy burdens upon the backs of their children. I remember when I was a child how glad I used to be to get half a day to go into the woods to cut hazel rods for our master. We knew what they were for, but we didn't care. Children will sometimes get into a little mischief. Now, I have known children when they did wrong to go and tell their father and mother. Well, I was never addicted to that. Children, no more than grown-up people, like to be caught in a naughty act. Sometimes people are inhuman when they detect their children wrong-doing. I said to Lucretia Mott once: "How do you manage your children?" "Well," the old lady said, "I never touch them with my hand, but tell them to go into the room, and, after reflection, tell me what they think about it." In all our dealings with little children we must be gentle, patient and forgiving; win them with our love and not terrify and repel them with harshness or severity.

Eastern Horse-Racing.

A Biloch has an intense love for horses and horse-racing, or rather mares and mare-racing; for these outer barbarians kill all their colts, partly because from the scarcity of fodder at certain seasons rearing them would be expensive, but chiefly because the horse is almost valueless among them. One man can hold twenty mares, but not two horses. Mares neither fight nor neigh; horses do both. Mares are gentle, easy to manage, gregarious; horses are rough, troublesome, unsociable. So argues the Biloch; and in his hills, where every man is still a predatory animal, living largely by sheep-stealing, making long, forced marches—often fifty or sixty miles in one night, and swooping down on the sleeping prey in the early dawn—he is right. For such work horses are not suited. No Biloch is a "man" until he possesses a mare.—Until that climax to his ambition is realized, he is a coolie, a cutter of grass, a herder of sheep, a mere cipher, a clod, a thing of no account in the body politic of his clan. Government, seeing the wiry endurance of the Biloch mare, has for some years been wisely liberal in its endeavors to encourage horse-breeding, especially that of colts, in the district. With this view a large number of first-class Arab and T. B. E. horses have been introduced into Derah Ghazi Khan, and an annual horse fair is held, at which large money prizes are given for young stock, particularly for colts and geldings. Thus, in spite of his prejudices, the Biloch is by that all-powerful destroyer of inherited customs, self-interest, slowly but surely learning that it is worth his while to rear his colts.—Another means, and almost more effectual, has been followed for years by successive district officers, and that is by having at the annual races for mares, races for colts.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Honeybrook's Fair Barber.

Honeybrook boasts of a lady barber. She has the reputation of being an expert in the tonsorial line, and her shop is well patronized. It is stated that a number of young men who, before the advent of this lady barber in town, only used to get shaved once a week, now find it necessary to be operated upon three or four times a week, and usually have their hair cut in the bargain. A gentleman from Reading, who recently visited Honeybrook, went into the barber-shop to have his surplus beard removed, and was so delighted with the easy shave, and especially the lady artist, that he can talk of scarcely anything else since. He announces his intention of trying to induce the lady barber to come to Reading and open a shop.—Reading Times.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

Eating Before Sleeping.

The Prejudice Against This Habit Ungrounded and Foolish.

Man is the only animal that can be taught to sleep quietly on an empty stomach, says the New York Journal of Commerce. The brute creation resents all efforts to coax them to such a violation of the laws of nature. The lion roars in the forest until he has found his prey, and, when he has devoured it, he sleeps over it till he needs another meal. The horse will paw and stamp in the stable and the pig grunt for the pail refusing all rest or sleep until they are fed. The animals which chew the cud have their own provisions for a late meal, just before dropping off to their nightly slumbers. Man can train himself to the habit of sleeping without a preceding meal, but only after long years of practice. As he comes into the world nature is too strong for him, and he must be fed before he will sleep. A child's stomach is small, and when perfectly filled, if no sickness disturbs it, sleep follows naturally and, inevitably. As digestion goes on, the stomach begins to get empty. A single fold in it will make the little sleeper restless; two will waken it; and if it is hushed again to repose, the nap is short, and three folds put an end to the slumber. Paregoric or other narcotics may close its eyes again, but without either food or some stupefying drug, it will not sleep, no matter how healthy it may be. Not even an angel who learned the art of minstrelsy in a celestial choir can sing a babe to sleep upon an empty stomach. We use the oft-quoted illustration "sleeping as sweetly as an infant," because this slumber of a child follows immediately after its stomach is completely filled with wholesome food. The sleep which comes to adults long hours after partaking of food, and when the stomach is nearly or quite empty, is not after the type of infantile repose. There is all the difference in the world between the sleep of refreshment and the sleep of exhaustion. To sleep well, blood that swells the veins in the head during our busy hours must flow back, leaving a greatly-diminished volume behind the brow that lately throbbed with such vehemence. To digest well, this blood is needed at the stomach and nearer the fountains of life. It is a fact, established beyond the possibility of contradiction, that sleep aids this digestion, and that the process of digestion is conducive to refreshing sleep. It needs no argument to convince us of this mutual relation. The drowsiness which always follows the well-ordered meal is itself a testimony of nature to this inter-dependence.

Very Ancient Butter.

Wigner and Church, two English chemists, have been examining two very ancient samples of butter. The first was Irish bog butter, which could not be traced with any degree of certainty to a particular locality; but there could be no doubt as to its being a perfectly authentic specimen, probably 1,000 years old. The other sample, which was much older, was taken from an Egyptian tomb, and dates from about 400 or 600 years before Christ. It was contained in a small alabaster vase, and had apparently been poured in while in a melted state. It closely resembled slightly rancid butter in appearance, color, smell, and taste. The analysis proved that the samples had not undergone any notable change during their long storage. A modification of this ancient method of preserving butter for long periods is the following: "Melt the butter in a stoneware or a well-glazed earthen pan: set in an outer water bath at a temperature of about 180 Fahrenheit and keep it heated, skimming it for some time until it becomes quite transparent: then pour off the clear portion into another vessel, and cool it as quickly as possible by placing the vessel in very cold water." It is in this way that the Tartars are enabled to supply the Constantinople market. In this condition the butter keeps perfectly fresh for six or nine months, if placed in a closed vessel and cool store. It has been found that butter melted and skimmed by the Tartarian method, and then salted by ours, will remain sound and fine-tasted for two years.

What He Would Do.

It was in the smoking car on the New York Central. There was one chap who was blustering a great deal and telling of how many duels he had fought, and behind him sat a small man reading a magazine.

"Sir!" sailed the big man as he wheeled around, "what would you do if challenged?"

"Refuse," was the quiet reply.

"Ah! I thought as much. Refuse and be branded a coward! What if a gentleman offered you the choice of a duel or a public horsewhipping—then what?"

"I'd take the whipping."

"Ah—I thought so—thought so from the looks of you. Suppose, sir, you had foully slandered me?"

"I never slander."

"Then, sir, suppose I had coolly and deliberately insulted you; what would you do?"

"I'd rise up this way, put down my book this way, and reach over like this and take him by the nose as I take you, and give it a three-quarter twist—just so?"

When the little man let go the big man's nose, the man with the white hat on began to crouch down to get away from bullets, but there was no shooting. The big man turned red—then pale—then looked the little man over and remarked:

"Certainly of course—that's it exactly!"

And then the conversation turned on the general prosperity of the country.—Detroit Free Press.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

CHANCERY NOTICE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, The Circuit Court for the County of Lenawee in Chancery.

At a session of said Court held at the city of Adrian, in said county, on the fourth day of May, A. D., 1882. Present, Andrew Howell, Judge of said court.

Thomas Barkerville, Complainant.
Betsey Barkerville, Defendant.

It satisfactorily appearing to this court that the defendant, Betsey Barkerville, is a non-resident of the State of Michigan. On motion of Thomas J. Gifford, of counsel for said complainant, it is ordered that the said defendant, Betsey Barkerville, cause her appearance to be entered in this cause within six months from the date of this order, and that in case of her appearance she cause her answer to the complainant's bill to be filed and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitor within twenty days after service of a copy of said bill and notice of this order, and in default thereof that the said bill be taken as confessed by the said defendant, Betsey Barkerville. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Tecumseh Herald, a newspaper published and circulating in said county, and that the said publication be continued in said paper once in each week for six successive weeks, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said defendant, Betsey Barkerville, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for her appearance.

ESTATE OF LUKE WOOD.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, on Wednesday, the 31st day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified of Zillah D. Wood, praying for the probate of an instrument now on file in this court, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased and that administration of said estate may be granted to petitioner, executor in said will named or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 26th day of June next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Tecumseh Herald, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

NORMAN GEDDES, Judge of Probate.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JUNE 12.—The senate passed bills to divide Iowa into two judicial districts and to authorize the Sioux City and Pacific road to bridge the Missouri river. Mr. Pendleton presented a petition from 10,000 citizens of Cincinnati and Covington, asking the passage of the civil-service reform bill. Mr. Brown offered a resolution authorizing each senator to employ a clerk at $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund. When the Japanese indemnity bill came up, an amendment by Mr. Morrill was adopted, to pay back in coin the exact amount received, $785,000. After a warm debate the bill went over. On motion of Mr. Logan the senate insisted upon its amendments to the army appropriation bill, and a conference committee was appointed.

JUNE 13.—In the senate, Mr. Grover made a favorable report on a right of way into San Francisco for the Ocean Shore railroad. The pending resolution, that each senator be given a clerk at a salary of $1,200, was rejected. Mr. Allison reported, with amendments, the house bill for the extension of national bank charters. In committee of the whole, the Japanese indemnity bill was taken up. Mr. Morrill's amendment, to destroy the bonds in which the fund was invested, was adopted, and it was resolved not to pay Japan the accumulated interest. The bill was passed by 35 to 13. The second section of the bill directs the payment of $140,000 from the treasury as prize-money to the officers and crews of the Wyoming and Takiang.

JUNE 14.—In the senate, Mr. Miller reported the bill for the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi canal. The joint resolution appropriating $375,000 to pay mail contractors in the southern states for services at the outbreak of the war was taken up, and Mr. Conger derided any liability of the government. The house bonded spirits bill came up as the regular order, and a substitute reported by the finance committee was read. Mr. Bayard urged the necessity of prolonging the bonded period from three to five years, and said the recent proposition in the house to reduce the tax to 50 cents per gallon had produced paralysis in the trade. Mr. Sherman expressed the opinion that a firm tax of 60 cents would yield more revenue than the present rate. Without taking action the senate adjourned.

JUNE 15.—In the senate, Mr. Maxey urged the passage of the joint resolution to appropriate $375,000 to pay debts due southern mail contractors at the outbreak of the war. Mr. Plumb secured the adoption of a resolution requesting the president to furnish the correspondence regarding the conduct of the British minister at Lima in connection with Minister Hurlbut's negotiation for the bay of Chimbote. Mr. Morgan submitted a resolution for a special committee to investigate the cause of and remedy for labor strikes. The bonded-spirits bill was then taken up. Mr. Windom said the house measure would encourage combinations dangerous to the revenues of the government. Mr. McMillan moved the indefinite postponement of the bill and its amendments, which was agreed to, by 38 to 20, and the senate adjourned.

JUNE 16.—In the senate, Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to provide for the performance of the duties of the presidency in case of a vacancy in both the presidency by vesting the succession in the members of the cabinet, beginning with the secretary of state. Mr. Blair presented a bill for a statue in Washington of Benjamin Franklin. An act was passed to authorize the Oregon Pacific road to bridge the Willamette river. Some debate ensued on the bill to reappropriate $375,000 to pay southern mail contractors, when it was laid over. The bill to enable national banks to extend their corporate existence came up. A long discussion took place on the proviso to exempt national banks from attachments and injunctions by state courts, and it was expunged. A communication from the secretary of war recommended an appropriation of $25,000 for additions to Jefferson barracks, [illegible] authorize the Southern Pacific and other railroads to consolidate. Mr. Blair offered an act to permit free lines to enter certain lands in Indian Territory. After an executive session an adjournment to Monday was taken.

HOUSE.

JUNE 12.—In the house, Mr. Butterworth reported back the army appropriation bill with the senate amendments, and recommended non-concurrence in the clause making retirement from the army compulsory at the age of 64 years, but the clause was agreed to by 101 to 75. Mr. Townsend reported a bill to create a board of commissioners of interstate commerce. Mr. Hammond reported a bill for a uniform system of bankruptcy. A long debate took place on the senate measure to increase the water supply of the District of Columbia.

JUNE 13.—The house passed a resolution authorizing the secretary of war to place at Washington's headquarters, at Newburgh, N. Y., a memorial column costing $10,000, and also appropriating $5,000 toward the expense of a continental celebration, next year, of the declaration of peace. The bill to increase the water supply of the District of Columbia was passed, with the proviso that half the cost be advanced by the government. The legislative appropriation bill was taken up in committee of the whole. Mr. Townshend offered an amendment making it unlawful to pay or demand any portion of an assessment, which was declared out of order. Mr. Springer proposed that the extra clerks in the pension office shall be men who served in the union army, but this was ruled out. An amendment was adopted that all receipts from the sale of reports of the United States supreme court in excess of $3,500 per annum shall be covered into the treasury.

JUNE 14.—The house went into committee of the whole on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Mr. White moved to strike out the item of $1,975,000 for salaries in the internal revenue bureau, and stated that Mr. Kelley had organized a pool between the whisky and tobacco people. Mr. Kelley retorted that the statement was the raving of a lunatic or of a deliberate liar. Mr. White replied that Mr. Kelley might lose an eye before he would make such a charge. The words were taken down, and a resolution of censure was prepared, but both members spoke humbly made apologies. Several amendments to prohibit political assessments were ruled out. Mr. Springer put through an amendment to fix the salary of the reporter of the supreme court at $5,000, and that the reports be hereafter printed at the government office and sold at 10 per cent. advance on the cost. The committee then rose and the bill was passed, by 125 to 55. A resolution was reported to hear George Q. Cannon, of Utah, salary and mileage to April 10. Mr. O'Neill reported the naval pension appropriation bill, carrying $[illegible].

JUNE 15.—The house went into committee of the whole on the river and harbor appropriation. Mr. Page explained its provisions, and a long debate ensued, only two pages of the bill having been read when the adjournment took place.

JUNE 16.—The house went into committee of the whole on the river and harbor appropriation bill. In regard to the improvement of the Ohio, Mr. Butterworth moved to limit to $30,000 the sum to be expended on the dam at Davis island, which was defeated. Mr. Singleton made an effort to secure $350,000 for the Illinois river. The committee then rose. Mr. Blackburn reported back the military academy appropriation bill. A resolution was passed setting aside $25,000 for Arctic explorations. An evening session was held, at which seventeen pension bills were passed, including one to give $50 per month to Mrs. Dandridge, a daughter of President Zachary Taylor.

JUNE 17.—The house considered the river and harbor bill in committee of the whole. A motion by Mr. Springer to strike out the item of $300,000 for a reservoir at the headwaters of the Mississippi was defeated. An amendment by Mr. Page was adopted, that the secretary of war carry on by contract the works contemplated in the bill. The committee rose and the bill was passed by 119 to 47. Mr. Robeson reported the naval appropriation which was recommitted.

COMMON COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

Marshall's Report:

The Marshal's report was accepted and adopted, and was in substance as follows:

Delinquents in the matter of rebuilding sidewalks are A. H. Chaplin, L. Montgomery and Mrs. Bird.

Wolcott, Temple & Co. have not yet removed the obstructions upon Bidwell street.

I have information from a reliable source that George Keyser is running a gambling room in the second floor of store belonging to I. P. Keyser, where the game called poker is played for money, the room being so situated that no light can be seen from the outside. I am in possession of a large list of names of young men and business men of this village who are in the habit of frequenting said room. The place is kept open at all times and especially used on Sundays. The door opens upon giving a secret signal which is three raps and a scratch.

PETITIONS AND APPLICATIONS.

Petition of S. W. Bordine and eight others, asking permission to run a telegraph line in certain streets of this village, was presented, and on motion was referred to the committee appointed at last meeting to supervise the telephone line to report at next meeting.

Petition of W. J. Arnold for permission to run an eating house and lunch room upon the coming 4th of July, was on motion laid upon the table.

Petition of Wm. DeMott and thirty-four others, asking that a street hydrant be put in at the railroad station tank for use of the fire department, was presented, and on motion the Recorder was instructed to draw a diagram of the depot buildings for use of the street committee, and said committee were instructed to lay the matter before the railroad authorities.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following bills were presented and on motion referred to the finance committee.

S. W. Temple, for lumber	$70 42
D. L. Whitenack, for plank	12 38

S. C. Stacy appeared before the Council in behalf of the local telephone exchange, asking that the Council subscribe for [illegible]. On motion the matter was referred to the President with view of calling a special meeting for consideration of the subject.

On motion the Marshall was instructed to trim the shade trees of the village forthwith, so that they shall not obstruct the light from the street lamps.

On motion the Marshal was instructed to remove the obstructions on Bidwell street in this village.

On motion Council then adjourned.

FREDERICK B. WOOD, Recorder.

Nine Physicians Outdone.

It is generally considered a pretty difficult task to outdo a physician, but the following will conclusively prove where nine were completely outdone. Mrs. Helen Pharviz, 331 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill., was treated for Consumption by nine physicians, and all pronounced her case incurable. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption completely cured her. Doubting ones, please drop her a postal card and convince yourselves. Sold by all druggists.

REMEMBER that Hon. Charles S May, of Kalamazoo, delivers an oration in this village on the 4th of July.

DIED.

He was born in Tompkins Co., N. Y., Feb. 22d, 1808. Hence at the time of his death was 74 years, 2 months and 26 days old. His native State was his home until he was twenty-eight years of age, when, with his family, a wife and two young children, he came to Michigan. His first home in our State was at Ann Arbor, where he professed faith in Christ, was baptized and received into the fellowship of the Baptist Church. From Ann Arbor he removed to Clinton Co., locating at Bath, where he became a pioneer farmer. There he became a constituent member of the Woodhull Baptist church. From the organization of this church until his return to his native State in 1845, he bore the office of deacon. During the following thirty three years of his life he made his home successively in several States of our Union. About four years ago, he came to Tecumseh, where he has found a home with his children and other relatives. He has always had a living interest in the cause of Christ as represented by his denomination. He was a Life Member of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, of the American Baptist Missionary Union, of the American Baptist Publication Society, and also of the Iowa Educational Society. During his residence in Tecumseh, he has frequently sent substantial gifts to feeble churches in our own State. He has cast bread upon the waters, and it will doubtless return after many days. His funeral was from the residence of Mr. Swick, Wednesday afternoon at one o'clock. The services were conducted by his pastor Rev. C. E. Conley.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

THE GRADUATING EXERCISES HELD ON FRIDAY, JUNE 23d, 1882.

An Interesting Program by the Undergraduates—A Fine Essay by the Graduate—An Able Address by the President.

The regular annual commencement at the Seminary took place on Friday of last week. A smart shower the night before had laid the dust and a more beautiful forenoon for the exercises could not have been asked for.—As there was but one graduate the attendance was not as large as usual, although when the hour arrived for the exercises to begin the hall was well filled and the literary program by a few selected undergraduates was a most creditable one. The hall was neatly trimmed with evergreens and decorated with flowers, these two mottoes in large evergreen letters being most conspicuous, "The contest is before us" and "Per Gradus, 1882." The music was furnished by the Seminary pupils and was mostly of a vocal character. It was finely rendered and very appropriate and added much to the interest of the program. The opening exercises were presented in the following order:

Music.
Essay—At the Threshold—Anna O. Bartlett.
Essay—Games—Bert Brown.
Music.
Essay — There's but one Pair of Stockings to Mend.—Mabel Brown.
Essay—Agriculture—J. N. Hunt.
Music.
Essay — Veneering — Kate Southworth.
Essay—The Last of the Gladiators—Eddie Rawson.
Music.
Essay—A German Colony—Louis Murbach.
Essay—The Ideal—Eva Wilson.

THE CONTEST.

When contests are spoken of the battle fields of the past and the possible contentions of the dim future rise before us with more or less distinctness. From the peaceful character of the present epoch we must not conclude that there is no contest before us. The statesmen of our time find controversies awaiting them too. The philosophical essays of Hume startled the world by the boldness of his questioning, but there are Humes living to-day. Conservatism—the tendency to think as our fathers thought—is so strong in the human heart that all beliefs are not renounced without strong evidence of their inferiority. Even the farmer and the mechanic in a less public manner meet new ways which stubbornly contest for supremacy over the old. The poor strive for daily bread, the rich for honor and fame, and we may well say—"Man is born on a battle field." In the moral as well as the material world a continual contest is going on. "But when man has tamed nature, asserted his place and dominion, behold, he is brought face to face with with a new foe—himself." Here all are on common ground, not a day passes but each individual finds evil arrayed against him in same form or other. Every department in life calls for earnest, persistent effort. Advancing years will bring new questions to be settled, and we must be prepared for our share in the great work, always remembering that the "Contest is before us."

The diploma was then presented to Miss McLain, and after music came the

ADDRESS BY THE PRINCIPAL.

The wise husbandman carefully selects the seed that he puts into the ground. He chooses only the perfect and best kinds. He desires his plants to be the most healthy and vigorous. The soil must be fertile and be thoroughly prepared. The sunshine and rain are kindly furnished and the industrious cultivation which he puts forth is finally rewarded by an abundant harvest.

Children are to be trained, and we find them "physically as well as metaphysically a thing of shreds and patches, borrowed unequally from good and bad ancestors and a misfit from the start." The soil they enter is the home, the qualities of which are various. We have the humic soil that is too sour, the sandy soil that is too bare, and the fertile soil that is so favorable to the highest development.—In the one the growth is crooked, in the other dwarfed, and in the third vigorous and symmetrical. The impressions made in these homes are lasting. Culture begins here and good tools and great skill should be used.—The lack of culture at this important period may prove disastrous. The parent is largely responsible for the influences that are thrown around the child. His associations should be carefully guarded both on the playground and in the field. I believe that many a boy of goodly parentage has been morally polluted by an association with ungodly companions. The home is the place where the conscience especially should be cultivated until it becomes tender. That power which every human being has of knowing what is right and wrong should receive attention in early life. He who is conscientious can be trusted. Grave responsibilities can be imposed upon him. He will prove a blessing to the school room and to the world at large. When the homes of our land are pervaded by true refinement and consistent christian life, very different will be the streams that flow into the school room. The impure home life is continually cropping out in Young America. Notwithstanding this dark side we can rejoice that there are so many homes so favorable to the culture that childhood demands. When the work of such a home is supplemented by the school and church the most cheering results will be produced. That the influence of the school should be just as good as the home or that it should always be of the proper kind will be conceded by all.

An English poet said, "A boy is better unborn than untaught." Education gives power. Why did the Prussians so easily gain every victory and so completely crush the French in the late Franco-Prussian war? The answer is, almost every Prussian had a common school education. That church which does not foster education will decrease in influence and numbers. God carries on his work by instruments and the better the tool the more effective will be the work, for "If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put forth more strength." Education makes us stronger because we are able to accomplish more labor, more powerful because every new victory develops intellectual strength. It extends the horizon of our mental vision and enables us wisely to choose our life work. What an inspiring thought it is that God has a place for every one of his creatures to fill and a gift for each one to exercise. What a sad thought it is that so many fail to find their places or use their God-given powers. History furnishes numerous examples of the wrecked life of the bright genius as well as the miserable failure of him who has mistaken his calling. The farmer's son of inferior ability is too often kept from school under the impression that book learning is not intended for him, while a more promising son is encouraged to continue his studies and thus rightly prepare himself for the duties of life, when the fact is that the dull boy needs the education worse than the bright one. The cultivation of the mind is just as essential to growth as is the cultivation of the plant. The lowest laborer would be a better laborer if he were educated and at the same time much more apt to gain a higher position. Do we sufficiently appreciate the advantages of an education? When we learned to read what a new world opened before us! The printed page revealed the experiences and thoughts of many of the noblest men and women of past ages.—We were then enabled to stand upon the shoulders of these worthies. The knowledge gained from the common English branches is an essential step to all further progress. Take from the people of Michigan to-day this knowledge and they would be not merely children but barbarians. These common English branches have been truthfully styled the foundation of an education. He who expects to become educated and has a prominent lack in these, can be appropriately compared to the foolish man who built his house upon the sand. Though we be able to translate difficult sentences in Latin and Greek, speak eloquently concerning the writings of English authors, our success in life will be greatly lessened, if we cannot spell common English words or comprehend the principles of arithmetic.

While parents are largely responsible for their children not becoming better educated yet our young people themselves are frequently to blame.—An eager desire to enter early upon the practical duties of life has been in the way of a thorough preparation.—Yes, an early marriage has often spoiled a prospect of a good scholarship.—Let us hasten slowly for it is much better to be ready for duties than to encounter them unprepared. Growth should be natural not abnormal. We must wait as well as labor. Our American people are too anxious to make short cuts to the business world. Our young men especially are impatient to go into the battle of life without properly fitting and proving their armor. They are impatient to practice their trades and secure profits before becoming skillful craftsmen; all eager to make fortunes without the long and tedious toil which is essential to success. We have far too many petty lawyers, quack doctors and school keepers, who assume to settle the quarrels, heal the diseases, and train the children of our land. True progress demands that these professions shall be filled by those who thoroughly understand their work. Intellectual culture will dignify any honest calling, and we would gladly see true refinement, the result of both head and heart culture, pervade all homes from the humblest cot to the most elegant mansion. The discipline secured and the persistent plodding habits formed will be of great advantage in following a chosen profession. As in school the bright genius who depends solely upon his smartness falls behind the mediocre with his well developed gift of continuance, so will it be in the business world.

But what is success? and why do we educate? Is success measured solely by the amount of money we make? And is this the object of education?—Granting that this is one object yet it is but a small part of true success.—Says Prof. Huxley, "That man has had a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will, and does with ease and pleasure all the work, that as a mechanism it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold, logic-engine, with all its parts of equal strength in smooth working order, whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature, and whose passions are trained to come to heed by a vigorous will the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty whether of nature or art; to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself." Thus we see that to rear an intellectual structure beautiful to behold even upon the much desired foundation of a thorough education in the common branches should not be our only aim. You may have beautiful theories, but unless there be a manhood or womanhood behind the theory or the knowledge no true success will be achieved. The development of the intellect which we properly prize so highly, gives power which can be used either for good or for evil. To approach the true type of manhood and womanhood heart-training must receive a prominent part of attention. To get into harmony with God should be the first aim of every human being. When this is realized there will be found beneath this foundation of intellectual attainments a rock, broad, solid and enduring. That you take heed how you build upon this foundation and diligently use enduring material is advice to be carefully heeded. "To respect others as yourself" requires that you have the right feeling toward others. Not only for your superiors in age and station but for your equals and inferiors. To learn and practice the appropriate forms of manifesting this feeling is no insignificant part of an education. He who can increase the real happiness of those around him does not live in vain.—The unselfish person will give expression of his kindly feelings in the home circle as well as in society. He will manifest feelings of sympathy and interest toward those who are most in need of them. The little child, the boot-black, or the servant will be treated by him with respectful deference. Prejudice will not deter him from placing a truthful estimate upon the conduct of another. He will never try to elevate himself or his friends by dragging some one else down, but in honor will prefer another. His opinions too will not be thrust forward with undue prominence. Even with this right feeling toward others careful training in the forms of expressing this feeling will be of great importance.

The founders of this Seminary appreciated the advantages of an education. They designed that young people should here be trained morally as well as intellectually. Those of you who have been reaping the benefits from it, and have realized the good influence it has long had over this community, can truthfully adopt the language of our Quaker poet:

"Long live the good school giving out year by year
Recruits to true manhood and womanhood dear;
Brave boys, modest maidens, in beauty sent forth,
The living epistles and proof of its worth.

Not validly the gift of its founder was made;
Not prayerless the stones of its corner were laid:
The blessings of Him whom in secret they sought
Has owned the good work which the fathers have wrought.

To Him be the glory forever:—We bear
To the Lord of the harvest our wheat with the tare.
What we lack in our work may He find in our will
And winnow in mercy the good from the ill."

The young woman who has finished our course of study and been presented with a diploma to-day, has been faithful in her work. The hard victories she has won has developed strength that will greatly increase her influence. The patient plodding habit formed will enable her to gain other victories. It is doubtless a great satisfaction to look back upon a course of study completed but no one should be satisfied with past achievements. The mind and the soul demand continual growth, without which we cannot keep in sympathy with the progressive movements of the world or remain cheerful and happy in old age. To exercise a refining influence upon a home circle, to fill the little niche, uncomplainingly and gladly, that God has hewn out for us is noble. Our happiness in this life will depend largely upon our own exertions, for

"We shape ourselves the joy or fear
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future's atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade

The tissue of the Life to be
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of Destiny
We reap as we have sown."

A subscriber writes as follows: "I feel at once my appetite and strength greatly improved; my expectoration less painful and less copious; my cough less troublesome; my sleep sound, refreshing and dreamless; my nervousness is all gone; my breathing less difficult; my heart's action more regular; my backache less severe; my digestion improved; my urine clear and voided without pain; my spirits more exuberant; my mind perfectly at ease; and yet I have only used half a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters."

The Hudson Battery will wake up the sleepy heads on the morning of the Fourth.

Adrift.

BY MAY PROBYN.

Ever the water-lily rocked
Upon the rocking stream,
Where the little clouds reflected, flocked
And steered across her dream.
And ever she sighed, "What, must I stay
In the river's bend from day to day?
Oh, were I free to sail away,
Where the seas with wonder teems!

"I know that I am fair," she said,
"I watch it in the wave;
At anchor here in the river bed,
That holds me like a grave.
What good is the sun's gold light to me—
Or what good a thing to be
When none draws over high to see
The beauty that I have!"

Was she happier when the stars were born,
And the bird sat nuing in the tree?
When she rocked and swayed, with her cables torn,
And felt that she was free?
When the banks sped backward on either hand—
For the rat had gnawed through her anchor stand,
And the wind had kissed her out to sea.

The river boats, on her, rocked and thocked
With currents counter-crossed,
Where the foam churned white in the eddy's track,
And the scattered stars were lost.
No glimpse she saw of either bank,
But a waste of weed that heaved and sank,
Where from gulf to gulf she reeled and shrank,
And from wave to wave she tossed.

The sun uprose through a glory spread,
And climbed by a cloudy stair;
And "What is the thing, O Sea!" he said,
"Your breakers are humming there?"
"That?" said the Sea, "with the muddied face,
And the cup all tattered and reft of grace?
A flower they say, from some island place,
That once on a time was fair?"

THE SHADOWY HAND.

I am a traveller and collector for a large house which executes many orders throughout the country. When I have an extensive district, which is often the case, I frequently have a considerable sum of money about me, and on several occasions the possession thereof has rendered me very uneasy; but no more than that of which I speak.

I had been assigned to a large territory in the West, a region rough and mountainous, and which, I had cause to believe, abounded in lawless spirits who might possibly give me some trouble.—A person of my calling is always supposed to have a large sum of money about him when he has been out for a number of days or weeks, and many is the time that I have seen people look at me with an expression on their faces that spoke louder than words how much they would like a chance of seeing what my wallet contained. But thus far away they never have had their wishes gratified in this respect, and, so long as my faithful six-shooter does not play me false, I don't mean that they shall.

One day at noontime saw me in one of the little villages of the West, hemmed in on all sides by high peaks and lofty summit passes. I had transacted my business there, and now sought the landlord of the inn to learn the way to the next village that I had wished to visit. From him I learned that it was twenty miles by the public road, and rough and hilly into the bargain.

"But is there no nearer way?" I asked. "If the road is in the state you say, it will be long after nightfall before I can reach there, and it looks much as though we might have a rainfall presently."

"There is a road over the mountains," he answered, after a pause, "but it has not been much used of late years, and the way is rough. Still, it can be got over; and as it is but little over half the distance it is by the main road, you will get to Silby fully an hour earlier than you could by that way."

"Then I shall try for it, for I want to get there before the storm, if possible."

"Keep the road straight ahead, and keep your eyes open," he said.

"Thank you; I shall do so," I answered.

"Good-day."

"Good-day," and the landlord waved his hand as I rode away.

For hours I wound along the most wretched road I ever saw. Every now and then a path would branch off, leading, apparently, into the heart of the forest. The afternoon passed away, and night came on, and still there was no change in the road, no sign of my being near to Silby. All was the same dreary wilderness as that through which I had been passing so many hours. With the coming of the darkness the rain began to fall. This added to the disquiet I had already felt, for I feared that I had left the road and got into one of those paths that led I knew not whither.

Faster and faster fell the rain, and with every moment the gloom increased, until the darkness was such that it could almost be felt. Still I plodded on, feeling there was little chance of reaching my place of destination, but with the hope that I might stumble upon some cabin that possessed human inhabitants, where I could find a fire and shelter for the night. More than an hour passed, and I had nearly given up all hopes of finding shelter, when I beheld the gleam of a light before me.—Encouraged by the sight, I urged my horse onward, and in a few minutes found myself in front of a low cabin, through the one window of which the light gleamed that had attracted my attention.

Dismounting, I approached and rapped loudly upon the door. There was the sound of shuffling feet within, then it was thrown open, and a man holding a candle in his hand appeared upon the threshold, and demanded what I wanted. As the light flashed upon his face I had the impression that I had seen it before; but it was gone in a moment.—In answer to his demand, I told him I wanted shelter for myself and horse for the night, and that if in the morning he would guide me to Silby, he would be suitably rewarded.

He made some reply, the burden of which I could not catch owing to the driving of the rain; and then, setting the candle down upon the floor, he came out, saying, as he laid his hand upon my horse's bridle, "'Tain't very good quarters that you'll get here, mister, but perhaps it's better than it is out in the rain."

"Any shelter is better than none on such a night as this," I answered, as I dismounted. And I followed him round to a rude hovel, where he did the best he could for my horse's comfort.

Then we went into the cabin, he picking up the candle he had placed upon the floor, observing, as he did so, "I keep bachelor's hall here, so you mustn't expect much; but you are hungry, I s'pose?"

I replied in the affirmative, as I drew up to the fire that shone upon the hearth, the heat of which was very grateful after my exposure to the storm. I watched my host as he placed some bread and meat upon the table, and his very look and motion went to confirm the impression that I had seen him before; and then it flashed upon my mind when and where. It was among the rough, unshorn loafers that were hanging around the bar.

The food being set out, he placed a rude seat by the table, and told me my supper was ready, making some excuse because it was not better. I answered him that it was as good, as I desired; and as hunger is the best appetizer a man can have, I did the course provender ample justice. When I was satisfied, I resumed my seat once more by the fire, and tried to enter into conversation with my host, but I made poor headway. He did not seem inclined to talk, and after a while I gave it up, and we sat in silence for some time, he ever and anon stealing a glance at me from under his shaggy eye-brows, which, in spite of myself, made me feel a little uneasy, when I reflected about the money upon me. At last, tired of this, I told him that I would like to go to bed, if he had a place where I could lie down. Upon this, he rose and led the way into the other small apartment of the cabin, and, setting down the candle, went out and closed the door.

There was a rude bed in the corner of the room, covered with a ragged quilt, and upon this I threw myself without taking off my clothes. My six-shooter I placed beside me, where I could lay my hand upon it at a moment's notice, and then I blew out the candle and tried to sleep. But that I soon found was impossible to do. A nameless something kept me awake. I could hardly define it as fear. It was more of a nervousness that I could not shake off, try as I would. My eyes would not stay shut, but wanted to remain wide opened and fixed upon the wall where the firelight, which shone through the cracks in the partition against which my bed stood, played with a weird sort of light.

Try as I would, I could not keep my eyes from the wall. Did I close them, the next minute they would be again wide open. Did I turn my head, I would be looking there again almost before I knew it. What I expected to see I hardly knew. Yet it came at last.

Suddenly upon the wall, where the light from the fire shone the brightest, there appeared the shadowy hand of a man clasping a long and deadly-looking knife.

For a moment my gaze was so riveted upon it that I could not turn my eyes; but a sound in the adjoining room broke the spell. Starting hastily up upon my elbow, I peered through the crack that was close to my head, and the sight I beheld caused another thrill similar to that which the shadowy hand had given me. My host, with a long knife in his hand, was approaching on tiptoe the door which led to my room. It was the shadow of his uplifted hand that I had seen upon the wall.

[illegible] could not doubt, and, thankful for the warning I had received, I prepared to meet him. Noiselessly I crept from the bed, and, with my six-shooter in my hand, stationed myself at its foot. The door was noiselessly pushed open, and the would-be murderer entered the room as silently as a phantom, and approached the bedside. His arm, with the deadly knife grasped in his hand, was for a moment held above the bed, and then it descended with a force that would have sent it through the body of a man, had one been lying there.

This was all I wanted. Surely, it was evidence enough to justify me in what I did. I raised my arm and fired. With a groan the villain fell forward upon the couch where I had lain hardly a minute before. With my finger still upon the trigger, should another shot be needed, I struck a match and lighted the candle; then holding it out before me, I approached the bed. The villain lay motionless. My bullet had found a way through his heart.

You can imagine how the rest of the night passed to me. With the earliest dawn, I mounted my horse, and as good luck would have it, rode directly toward Silby, where I arrived in a couple of hours. I was not long in searching out the proper officers, to whom I told my story, and a little later I guided them back to the cabin, where they found all as I had stated it, and at once exonerated me from blame in causing the villain's death.

French Idea of Women.

Women have no worse enemies than women.

One must be a woman to know how to revenge.

Woman conceals only what she does not know.

Woman is a creature between man and the angels.

Woman is more constant in hatred than in love.

Most women curse sin, before embracing penitence.

Women who have not fine teeth only laugh with their eyes.

Women ask if a man is discreet, as men ask if a woman is pretty.

When woman is no longer attractive she ceases to be inconstant.

Women never weep more bitterly than when they weep for spite.

The most chaste woman may be the most voluptuous, if she loves.

When a woman cannot be revenged, they do as children do: they cry.

A woman gives the audacity which her beauty prompts us to be guilty of.

In the twenty German universities there were registered for the Winter season of 1881-82, 22,792 students, of whom 1,242 were foreign. The medical students numbered 5,002, and 310 of them were aliens.

An Old Adage Verified.

A New York man tells in the Evening Post how he was cured of interfering in other people's business. He lives near a police-station, and upon one occasion saw a crowd moving toward the station-house, and a poor-looking woman struggling between two officers. He knew nothing about the reason of the arrest, but became at once interested on noticing that the prisoner was a middle-aged decent-looking woman, apparently not intoxicated, entreating to be let go.

He followed the crowd to the station-house, succeeded in getting in, determined to see fair play, and took a position in front of the sergeant's desk, before whom the woman was placed, and at once charged by the officer with disorderly conduct. They found her in the middle of the street, talking loudly and wildly at several men and boys, and offering to fight. As she did not obey their directions to go home, they resolved to "take her in." She struggled with them all the way to the station-house, making night hideous by her shrieks, etc.

The woman all this while remained calm and quiet, and the sergeant asked her what she had to say to the charge. She at once commenced a tirade against those who had caused her arrest. She said that she was quietly sitting on the step, when several loafers came along and insulted her, one of them slapping her in the face; that she "went for them," and a skirmish ensued; that the police came up, and instead, of arresting them arrested her. At this moment she turned her eyes on the good-natured citizen or bystander, who was there to see that she had fair play, and exclaimed, in a voice of thunder, "There's one of the miserable loafers now." With that she planked her stout bony fist with full force right in her champion's left eye. His championship ended in an instant, and her case was settled by the sergeant ordering the officers to "take her down;" and they had their hands full. The "champion's" eye was badly blacked, and when he told his wife about the case she reminded him of the well-worn story of the man in Tennessee who was hung for not minding his own business.

Longfellow's Visit to the Queen.

Miss Blanche Roosevelt gives the following as Longfellow's account of his interview with Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle:

"An imposing lady in black, with flowing drapery came quickly forward to greet me. It was her majesty Queen Victoria. She extended her hand, and I offered to take it."

"What?" I interrupted, "did you not bend and offer to kiss it?"

"No," said he timidly, "I was not then familiar or acquainted with court etiquette, as I am now. She offered me her hand evidently to shake, and I shook it."

"Why," said I, "she is the most inexorably exigeante of all sovereigns. You must have horrified her."

"I presume I did," said he simply. "Now I think of it, she was disconcerted, I suppose for that reason, but she rallied graciously, and asked me about America and myself. She explained:

"'We speak of America first, because you are American poets (very good ones, ours.'

"'Tennyson is the world's poet, madam,' said I, bowing gravely. She smiled in gratified acquiescence, and continued:

"'You are very generous.'

"Her majesty was then pleased to converse on general topics, but persistently went back to the subject of myself. I felt she was piqued about something at first, and her last words were;

"'We shall not forget you,' adding with a laugh, 'why, even all my servants read your poems?'

The poet then glanced up, and with an almost comical expression, he said:

"What do you think she intended by it? I was nonplussed, and to-day, although many years have passed, I am undecided as to what her majesty's real meaning was."

The Horsey Girl.

A style of the day which I find even harder to bear than that of the grown-up baby is, says the Pall Mall Gazette, the lady's version of the horsey youth. She has borrowed his billycock hat, his dog's-ear collar, his knowing breast-pocket, his gloves, his buttons, and his boots. Her hair is cut short, like a curly boy's; her jacket is made by a London tailor; Newmarket has given its fiat to her horseman's overcoat, and the flower in the button-hole is the last word of Piccadilly. Nor let us forget the whip, for no family that respects itself can live without its collie, or several collies. And a girl of this persuasion could as little be seen without her dog-whip as a guardsman without a bouquet. She has contrived, too, to spoil what I take to be as pleasant a sight as the animated world affords—a fine woman sitting well a fine horse. The poetry of motion is dismally turned into prose by the habit cut square at the ankle, the visible trousers and jockey boots. The theory is, as we all know, that the fair rider in Rotten Row is fresh from a run across country. The melancholy fact is that she has somewhat the look of a stable-boy who has thrown on a skirt. My French friend is so far right; it is difficult, indeed, to think of this female tally-ho as entirely a thing of beauty.

The London Grocer says: One of the most curious facts in the history of coffee and chicory during the past ten years is the great decline in the manufacture of home-dried chicory. The trade is now nearly extinct. In 1871 there were 15,666 cwts. charged, the duty amounting to £18,995; at that time the duty was £1 4s. 3d. per cwt. In 1873, when the duty was reduced to 12s 1d: the rate of production had declined to 9,131 cwt., the duty derived being but £5,566. Five years later, in 1878, the quantity dried had declined to 4,375 cwts.; and in 1881, it had still further fallen to 2,365, the duty being only a little over £2,000. Since 1875 the factories scattered over the country have ceased to exist, the small output since that year being confined to the Yorkshire district alone.

We do not judge men by what they are in themselves, but by what they are relatively to us.

General Howard Praying by the Bed of a Dying Soldier.

"An Old Private," writing to the Belfast Journal, says:

"I once sat on the picket line at the Rappahannock with large squad of soldiers who were members of different regiments and hailed from different States. General Howard was being discussed. Some of the soldiers, with much profanity, were abusing him. After many remarks had been made, one man, a tall, muscular fellow, hailing from Ohio, spoke: 'Boys, I will tell you what I know of General Howard. Just before Chancellorsville my only brother, a mere boy, was sick and dying. We were together in a little tent, and Jimmy knew that he must soon be transferred out, and one dark, stormy night I sat down by his side and took hold of his thin hands. He talked of home. He sent little messages of love to the old folks and the girls, gave me some good advice, but I saw he was uneasy. Something seemed to trouble him. After a while he told me he was sort of uneasy about the future. He kind of thought there was to be a general inspection over there, and he was not ready for it. He wanted some one to pray for him. I never took much stock in those things, but he looked so pitiful like that I made up my mind that I would find some one to help the poor fellow prepare for the future. So through the rain and mud I ran. It was awful dark, but I soon found the chaplain's tent, but the chaplain was sick and not able to go out. What to do I didn't know. I never could go back to the poor boy alone. I happened to think of Howard. I had heard the officers laugh about what I was doing. I ran across the field half a mile to his headquarters. The guard had been removed, and I knocked at the door of the General's tent. When he came I blurted out my errand. He caught up his hat and hurried with me to my tent. Poor Jimmy was very low and breathing hard, but he knew me, and when I told him who the General was his pale cheeks flushed with joy. Howard got down by the poor boy's side, and how he prayed! My own eyes were so dim that I could not see much for a few moments. When I did look Jimmy had passed away. He had one hand on the General's shoulder, and there was a sweet smile on his face. Howard spoke lots of encouraging words to me before he left, and when Jimmy was buried General Howard came down to the grave, spoke a few words of sympathy and kindly shook my hand. Now, boys, you had better change the subject."

"It is needless for me to write that there was no more abuse of General Howard on that picket post."

An Intelligent Dog.

The most intelligent dog I ever knew was Bub, belonging to the genial librarian of Horticultural hall, and no doubt remembered by many who frequented the place. Bub, unlike most dogs, was always ready to display his acquirements. "Now, Bub," Mr. B. would say, "show the lady how little children walk." The dog would lay flat on his belly and pull himself along by his paws the length of the room over the cushioned seats. "Now, Bub, go play the violin." This order would see placing a chair at the table. The dog mounted the seat, sat upright with his paws on it, and lifted first one, then the other, striking them on the table. "Now, sing." Bub threw up his head with the air of a professional, and howled away till his master stopped him. "One evening," said Mr. B., "when sitting in the alcove reading, Bub came, got up beside me, and put his paws on my arm. I said to him: "Now, Bub, if you want to do that, get a newspaper." He immediately got down, went across the room, and came back with the paper.—The next evening he came again (I had put all the newspapers away), but I said the same to him. He hunted round the room for some time, and, not finding any, went to the waste-basket and brought me from it a piece of paper as large as my hand." Bub did not like to be washed. He soon found there was a particular day for the operation. When he was satisfied of this, and the day arrived, he was nowhere to be found. After a long hunt he was discovered in an out-of-the-way place in the building where he had secreted himself. This he did repeatedly. Bub was friendly to those visitors at the hall who noticed him or whom he saw often. One day when I went in the dog was alone. I sat down and called him to me; he seemed glad to see me, as usual. In a little while a man respectably dressed, but having a wooden leg, entered and took a seat. Bub eyed him curiously. There was evidently, to his mind, something wrong; he looked different from other people. The dog was quiet until the man rose to depart, when he flew at him, with fierce barks, in a perfect rage. Finding the visitor took no notice of him, he soon quieted. About two years ago Bub's mistress died, and after her death the dog pined away and soon followed her. Peace to his memory! We have his likeness, among others, in a collection we have been making of our dog friends. We should be happy to receive the photograph of any family pet belonging to anyone who may chance to read this article.—Boston Transcript.

For Bachelors Only.

There is an apartment house going up on Forty-first street, near Broadway, nine stories high—the roof now being put on, says a New York Letter. It is to be for bachelors only. No females allowed on the premises—a species of Mohammedan paradise. It would be safer for a woman to sit with the nymphs of Bougheran all day smoking cigarettes than to cross the threshold of this establishment, sacred to celibacy, and it would be very much safer for the tenants on the ninth floor to sleep on the sidewalk than in their own apartments. A fire in this house would be a horror to be remembered. There should be a building law capable of catching old man Avarice, that engenders such monstrosities, by the throat and shaking the devil out of him.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

STONES IN THE KIDNEYS

And Bladder Expelled—Long Suffering of one of Troy's Best People—A Lucky Man.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pains. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish, to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly,

JAMES ANDREWS,

No. 10 Marshall St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Get it of your druggist, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y., "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

Happy is the father whose children are so young that he can delude them into the belief that the procession is all there is of the circus.

"A fellow must sow his wild oats, you know," exclaimed the adolescent John. "Yes," replied Annie, "but one shouldn't begin sowing so soon after cradling."

"Yes," said a lady complacently; "I expect we'll get rich now. My husband has just been appointed one of the receivers of an embarrassed savings bank."

"John," said the teacher, "I'm very sorry to have to punish you." "Then don't; I'll let you off this time," responded John.

"What is the worst thing about riches?" asked the Sunday school superintendent. And the new boy said, "Not having any."

"Grandpa, the sun is brighter in summer than in winter, is it not?" "Yes; and it's warmer and enjoys better health." "Why does it enjoy better health?" "Because it gets up earlier."

A squaw refused to marry a Canadian Indian, and he took her scalp—a lock of her hair, as it were. She then married him, and it wasn't long before he hadn't hair enough for a scalp lock.

"Confound it, you've shot the dog! I thought you told me you could hold a gun." Pat: "Sure and so I can, your honor. It's the shot, sorr, I couldn't howld."

"Yes," said the country member, "I went to that variety show because I was sure there'd be nobody there who knew me. Durned if pretty much the whole legislature wasn't there!"

At a New York dinner one man gave his fork to another, with, "Just stick that fork into that potato for me, will you?" His unneighborly neighbor did as he requested, and left it sticking there.

Officer of the Prussian guards, looking at the ocean, to his wife: "Isn't this a glorious sight, Minnie? But the sea seems greatly agitated—probably has never before seen an officer of the Prussian guards."

"I hear Mr. Griffin has the pneumonia," said Mrs. Budds, who was calling on Mrs. Potts. "Well, I don't believe it," retorted Mrs. Potts; "he's too mean. If he has any monia at all, it's an old or second-hand one."

Teacher: "Can you multiply together concrete numbers?" (They appear uncertain.) Teacher: "What will be the product of forty apples multiplied by six pounds of beef?" Small boy, triumphantly: "Mince-pies."

Distressing episode: A lady who had quarrelled with her bald-headed lover said, in dismissing him: "What is delightful about you, my friend, is that I have not the trouble of sending you back any locks of hair."

"Your opponent was a bright speaker," the citizen said to the candidate who had not been elected by two thousand majority. "Yes," was the sad reply, "very bright. He cast reflections upon me all through the campaign."

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time!" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

GLEANINGS.

Little Denmark, which has a population of about $1,800,000, and a national debt of $28,000,000, is going to spend $18,500,000—a good deal more than her yearly income—in forts and new ships of war.

The most remarkable utterance, probably to be found in Thomas Jefferson's writings is the expression that he "had rather live under newspapers without a government than under a government without newspapers."

The Boston city fathers have ordered that hereafter only "small boys who appear to be under 13 years of age" shall be permitted to play ball within the sacred limits of the Common, and that they must use soft balls that will not break the glass in the lamps.

It is said that the pleasure seekers of English society have found at last a nightly panacea in the subtle mysteries of poker. It is played after dinners, is patronized by the ladies, and is carried to such an extent that it is already regarded as a serious, and in some cases, ruinous, social scandal.

It has been customary for railroad companies to carry theatrical travelers at less than ordinary rates, and issue free passes to the business managers of shows. Next season the reduction in rates will be made to no parties of less than ten persons, and the deadheads will be wholly cut off.

During the War of 1812 the firm of Daggett & Kensett, of New Haven, contracted to supply the army with canned soup, and this was the initial step in an industry which is now of enormous extent and importance. Two cans of that soup are now in the possession of William Daggett, a grandson of the man who put them up, and, so far as can be judged from the appearance of the cans, which are still air-tight, [illegible] from the heavy ton body, the soup is all ready for another war.

Jennie Cramer's brother Edward writes to a New Haven paper disputing the disgraceful stories set afloat by the infamous Malleys to the prejudice of his murdered sister, and defending his mother's treatment of her. He says that the charge that she was lax in her discipline and allowed Jennie free choice of male companions is utterly false. Jennie did not drink beer, he says; did not smoke cigarettes; was not "free and easy" with young men, and was never engaged to "a young German barber," with whom scandal-mongers have made her take so many late evening rides. "Had my parents any knowledge whatever of the character and reputation borne by the Malleys, they would never have allowed Jennie to have anything to do with them, or if Jennie herself had any such knowledge she never would have condescended to notice them."

Bellewood Seminary is a Presbyterian institution for girls near Louisville. George Ross, a well-to-do and respectably connected bachelor farmer of Hilton, Ill., labors under the delusion that he is under the immediate direction and oral instruction of Jesus Christ. The hallucination is a remarkable one. Had Mr. Ross become possessed of the belief that he was the Savior himself he would simply have imitated the example of scores of his fellow men.

George I., King of Greece, is perhaps the most unpopular monarch in Europe. He seldom visits any public assembly or institution, or manifests any interest in public affairs, but gives almost undivided attention to his farm and horses. His subjects think that he regards Greece merely as a rented estate, out of which he is striving to make as much money as possible while his tenure lasts.

It will pay a merchant who has a show window to hire a well-dressed person to look at the goods he displays. If the agent will, every quarter of an hour, walk up to the window as if there were something attractive in it, some other person will soon stop, and the other two will gather a crowd. In fact, many ill-bred but inquisitive people will force themselves between the first comer and the particular object that he is supposed to be viewing.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Geo. C. Clarke, of Port Dalhousie, Ontario, states that she had been confined to her room for a long time with that dreadful disease, Consumption. PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 20 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Collinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE WALTER A. WOOD HARVESTING MACHINES

Take the Lead.

In 1853, 500 Machines were sold.
In 1881, 40,413 were sold, and
47,000 have been ordered for 1882.

But the NE PLUS ULTRA of Harvesting Machinery is the Wood Twine Binder. This machine was first put upon the market in 1880, and 4,184 machines were sold that year. In 1881, the sales swelled to 10,034, and orders for over 12,000 have already been received for 1882.

THE WOOD TWINE BINDER!

Possesses these special points of excellence:

1—It is the most perfect automatic self binder ever made.
2—It effects a positive separation of the bound from the unbound grain.
3—The sheaf is formed and compressed without any strain on the twine until the knot is tied.
4—The grain is straightened by the action of the packer as it enters the binder.
5—The automatic uniform sizing of the bundle, thus relieving the driver of the care of stopping and starting the binder.

Last year's machines proved such a perfect success that they will be built substantially the same for 1882, with such improvements in minor details as may be found necessary.

Every farmer desiring to buy a self binder should examine the Wood Twine Binder before purchasing.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JUNE, 29, 1882.

TO AND FRO IN DETROIT ON REUNION DAY, JUNE 15th, 1882.

Never since 1876, have I seen such a human jostle on the streets of an American city. In looking upon the procession of distinguished persons, my soul was moved to enthusiasm. The central figure of attraction was the calm sagacious soldier, whose name will never be separated from Shiloh, Fort Donelson and Richmond, nor indeed will it be from the chivalrous military history of the civilized world. He was accompanied by one who is justly noted as a "legal colossus," G. V. N. Lothrop. Then came the man whose fame has come to us in splendid pictures and glowing verse, whose victorious battle ride to Winchester is the pride of his country and the wonder of nations. "Hurrah for Winchester," lustily shouted the writer, and the dapper, trim-built indomitable Sheridan, with Chesterfieldian politeness acknowledged the compliment. "Good for you, Dan," shouted some ardent admirer of Sickles, and up went one of his crutches, not to "show us how fields were won," but in hearty recognition of an old comrade.

"Bravo, Rutherford," caused a bland smile to illumine the face of Hayes, who was evidently glad he was not forgotten by the people. Ex-Gov. Marshall Jewell, of Conn., was an object of ready recognition, as his handsome face has so often been sketched by the artistic Nast. He was the second distinguished tanner that had passed in order that day. For like Gen. Grant, he was once a member of "Simon's profession." The stately Jerome, our governor, was there with Brown of Wisconsin, the orator of the day, a brave soldier and a keen parliamentarian. Then came the rank and file of honored men who carried arms through fields of struggle, stormed stubborn ramparts and waded through trenches of blood. Men marched along looking wan and sick, who pined amid the solitudes of Andersonville and Libby. The silent flutter of faded, shot-torn flags were eloquent and inspiring and aroused the enthusiasm of the great mass. As I turned from those battalions, I thought what those noble men have done will not, shall not be forgotten, for among the fireside tuitions that come to the children from parental lips, even though in marking the military exploits of the world the names of Cæsar, Hannibal or Napoleon are mentioned, yet the American rank and file of chivalric devotion and bravery will not be overlooked, knowing the result of their work, crushed to death a dire rebellion unequaled in history, and helped to sustain a Republic unsurpassed in the world. For the American soldier I say with an eloquent writer, "cheers for the living and tears for the dead."

I gladly left the sweltering, surging mass for a trip on the beautiful Bosphorus of America, (Detroit river) whose quiet waves lap our border like an edging of lovely blue. But in quest of greater quiet and deeper repose, I hied away to the sequestered Elmwood, (God's acre) and there I moralized about the graves of some who would have been prominent in the celebrations of the day. One stately shaft of stone, met my gaze and on it was sculptured "Chandler." It was enough; I turned my mind from military to civil exploits. I thought of the distinctive sturdy courage, the classic vehement stride upon the senate floor, the clarion eloquence that had in it no uncertain sound as he called rebellion and its persistent chieftain by the right name. I was glad beneath that vernal knoll in beautiful Elmwood cemetery reposed the dust of a man whose character was massive and like the towering heights of his native New Hampshire hills. He will stand in memory, lofty among the men who have wrought well in their day and generation. In conclusion permit me to state such a sight as that witnessed on the 15th is rarely seen in Detroit. Nature arched her blue dome over the city of Delight, the Jerusalem of Michigan, beautiful for situation and the joy of all the state. She had on her beautiful garments on that festive day, sending away strangers with an impression, they had seen and enjoyed the reunion of the Army of the Potomac in the most beautiful city on the American continent. JOHN R. CLARK.

LENAWEE'S PIONEER LAWYERS.

The Paper Read by Judge C. A. Stacy at the last Meeting of the State Pioneer Society

The first settlement in Lenawee county was made in June, 1824, at Tecumseh. The same summer and fall settlements were made in Blissfield, followed a year or two afterwards by settlements at the city of Adrian and in the town of Raisin.

ISAAC STETTSON.

In 1827 Isaac Stettson came into the county, first stopping at Adrian, then returning to Detroit, and after a short stay there he returned to Tecumseh, and settled there, staying until about the time of the Black Hawk war in 1832, when he left there for Illinois, where he is said to have died about the year 1834. He came from the State of New York; was a well read lawyer, but loved the frontier life and moved on to newer settlements as the population increased.

NATHAN WILLIS.

In the same year Nathan Willis came to this state from Connecticut, settled in Tecumseh, lived there until 1833, then removed to Wisconsin where he died in 1839. He was a ploding, industrious, painstaking man, correct and careful in his professional and business affairs, and when he left was the oldest lawyer in practice in the county. He was a cousin of the poet, Nathaniel P. Willis, who then lived in N. Y. city, and his habits and mental capacity in its practical matter of fact view of things bore a marked contrast to the idealism of the poet.

Both these men, while leaving their impress upon the young settlement here, can hardly be traced, and I find but three or four persons in the county who recollect them at all, and but a single person now living can give any account at all of their character or habits or the time of their coming to or departure from our county.

PETER R. ADAMS.

In 1830 Peter R. Adams moved with his family to Tecumseh, arriving there July 26th of that year, and with the exception of a short absence in the state of Kansas he has ever since that time resided at Tecumseh. He was born in Tioga county in the state of Pennsylvania, studied law at Danville, N. Y., completed his legal studies in the state of Pennsylvania, in the office of the afterwards eminent Pennsylvania judge Ellis Lewis, and was admitted to the bar in 1825, in Tioga county, where he remained until his removal to Michigan with his young wife in the spring of 1830, and final settlement in Tecumseh. He came with his family through Pennsylvania to Pittsburg and Erie; along the lake shore from Erie to Cleveland and Detroit, then all small villages between which the clearings were small and the forest almost broken; past Toledo, then a small hamlet; along the border of Lake Erie whose waters were then seldom whitened by the sails of the few vessels or broken by the paddle wheel of the two or three steamers which then floated on its bosom, and performed all the labors incident to the opening of the first settlement on the borders of the great lakes. The contrast between the means of transit and travel and its amount by both land and water then and the vessels and steamers now plying the lakes, and the railroads speeding along and serving the wants and pleasures of the great people who have grown up in the north-west since he came here as seen by him this very season is wonderful, exceeding anything he could have imagined at that time; and as described by him to the writer since his return home seem more like the dreams of the enthusiast or the romancer than the chronicles of living facts which have grown up under the eye of the early pioneer.

Mr. Adams continued in the practice of his profession until 1842 when he retired from the profession on account of ill-health with a well earned competence and a fine professional reputation, since which time he has spent most of his time as a scientific practical farmer, adding to the knowledge of the world by his successful agricultural labors. As a member of the legislature of the State and of the Constitutional Convention of 1850, and in various other public trusts confided to him by the people of the state and county he has left the impress of his intellect upon the institutions of the county and the state.

Mr. Adams and his wife are still living in Tecumseh,—he, the only remaining member of the bar of the county previous to the adoption of the first state constitution,—with children, grand-children and great-grand children to cheer their declining years.—Long may they both remain with us to gladden our hearts and to remind us of the trials and hardships of pioneer life and as an example to this generation of the fruits of a well-spent life.

EZRA ST. JOHN.

Ezra St. John came to this county and settled at Clinton in 1834, and practised his profession until his death in 1839. I remember him as an active energetic man older than most of the people then settled here. He left a family there and one son only recently removed from Clinton.

ALEX. R. TIFFANY.

In 1832 Alexander R. Tiffany moved to this county from Palmyra, Wayne county, N. Y., where he was admitted to the Bar about 1819, appointed first judge of the county court in 1823 and held that office until he removed to Palmyra in this county, a village founded by a party of settlers including Judge Tiffany and family from Palmyra, New York. Under the territorial government he was appointed prosecuting attorney, was eight years judge of probate for the county under the state government, member of the constitutional convention of 1850 and also of the legislature of the state. He was author of Tiffany's Justice Guide and Tiffany's Criminal Law, was one of the best common law lawyers, a close student, a zealous and able advocate, an honest man; his memory is revered and held in warm affection by our people.

ANDREW BACKUS.

About this time Andrew Backus removed to our county and settled at Tecumseh, where he lived until about 1855. He was an able lawyer, held the office of register in the land office at Marquette in the upper peninsula 4 years, and finally removed to Detroit in 1855 and retired from the profession. His father was one of the ablest lawyers and judges of the state of Connecticut, where Mr. Backus was born and raised. He was the best versed in elementary law of our early lawyers. Kind, genial, of fine social qualities, the young lawyers looked up to him for advice and instruction which he was always ready to give, at a time when few books and small libraries rendered the study of the law much more difficult than at present.

ORANGE BUTLER.

Orange Butler settled at Adrian in this county about the year 1833. He came here from the state of New York where he was admitted to practice. He practiced law a short time, attended court in the fall of 1836 and in April 1837, but afterwards engaged as a contractor on the Toledo railroad and left the profession. He afterwards removed to Lansing soon after the removal of the capital there, where he was engaged in land operations, was elected justice of the peace and served a number of years and died about the year 1855.

PETER MOREY.

Peter Morey was born and raised in Cazenovia in Madison county, New York, was educated at the academy in Hamilton, studied law with Slomer & Gridley there, was admitted to the bar in 1831, settled in Cazenovia in 1832, moved to the village of Eaton, from whence in the spring of 1835 he removed to Tecumseh, Michigan, where he resided until the spring of 1837, when he removed to Detroit. He was appointed attorney general by Gov. Mason, holding the office 4 years and soon after the expiration of his office moved to Tecumseh, and after a few years removed to Adrian where he resided until his age and infirmities compelled him to stop the practice of law when he removed to Sidney, Ohio, and then lived with his daughter until his death in the fall of 1881, at the age of 83 years. Mr. Morey was a fine scholar, a courteous old school gentleman, an active politician of the Democratic school, public spirited and foremost in all public improvements. Kind to the poor, charitable to the full extent of his means, noble, seconded socially and in kindness and charities by his noble wife who still survives him, and whose kindness and active benevolence and untiring industry in the church and in society are still remembered with grateful feelings by the pioneers in Detroit as well as in Tecumseh and Adrian. Mr. Morey was an able lawyer, talented and energetic. His labors in the office of attorney general in the early history of our state have left their powerful and beneficial impress on the judicial and legislative history of our state which can never fade away.

ALLEN HUTCHINS.

Allen Hutchins came about the year 1833 to Adrian from Orleans county, New York, and practiced his profession here until 1836, when he was appointed receiver of the land office at Ionia, then being organized. He returned to Adrian to reside after the close of his official term, and the death of two or three of our oldest citizens makes it impossible for me to learn more particulars of one who as [illegible] of the leading politicians of our county. He died a few years after his return to Adrian from Ionia. He was reputed an able lawyer and business man.

AHIRA G. EASTMAN.

Ahira G. Eastman came to this state in the fall of 1835, was admitted to the Bar that year and practiced law here until about the year 1838, when he removed to Van Buren county where he resided until his death last year. Mr. Eastman was a careful prudent man, and performed well and faithfully the duties devolving upon him in his profession.

CONCLUSION.

In the foregoing notes I have presented a short sketch of all the lawyers who resided here before the adoption of the state constitution, and I believe it includes the name of every lawyer down to the time I came here in August, 1836, who had practiced the profession in the county of Lenawee. In the fall of 1836 and the following winter the new lawyers increased rapidly both by immigration and admission here to practice. But I have not been able to give a satisfactory sketch of the Bar of the county since our state was admitted. I have collected the names of nearly one hundred young men who have at various times resided in and practiced law in our county. I leave to other hands the taking and perfecting sketches of their lives and labors among us. It would be of great interest and value to the county and state, and must be done soon or it cannot be done at all.

Of the lawyers here before 1836, but a single one remains in the county and only two are now living.

A little over fifty years have passed and the county which was then a wilderness with a few groups of savages passing back and forth across its borders, has now a cultivated and intelligent population of over 50,000 people, with churches, school houses, manufacturing buildings and machinery and beautiful dwellings, and all the appliances of civilized life, reared, erected and brought forth by the intelligent labor of our people, because little outside wealth has ever been brought here to assist in these improvements. In all their labors for the improvement of our county, our profession has done its full share. Its moral, political and social force has always been on the side of progress and advancement. In remembering what they and the other pioneers have done for our county and state, let us always bear in mind their trials and sufferings in their pioneer life, and emulate their love of country and humanity, their hospitality and their virtues.

To Keep the Blood Pure

is the principal end of my industrious and discoveries in medicine. To this object probably no one has contributed more signally than Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Dr. E. P. Cummings, of Grand Haven, has just completed an artificial palate for Jacob Benten, after Dr. Kingsley's method, which consists of fitting a soft, flexible palate, attached to a gold plate. Mr. Benten is rapidly learning to talk with it.

The arm of Lake Michigan, 6 miles in length, which extends to Holland, Ottawa county, is hereafter to be known as Macatawa bay. A fine park has recently been laid out near the mouth of the bay, and a hotel is now being erected there, in consequence of which Holland is rapidly assuming the airs of a summer resort.

Mason News: The Michigan statute making stealing a ride on a freight car a state prison offense is an outrageous travesty on justice. There is no more reason why a man should be imprisoned for stealing a ride on a freight car than for stealing a ride on a lumber wagon. In any event the punishment is entirely too severe. The statute is born of the free passes which the members of the legislature take as advance bribes from the railroads.

THE CELEBRATION.

The program of exercises that has been published will be substantially observed on the coming Fourth. Owing to its length, it will be necessary to commence operations promptly at nine o'clock A.M., and people who wish to see the morning procession must be in town by that hour. The line of march has been fixed by the Marshal of the Day as follows:

The line of march will be formed on Chicago street, at the East Branch school house at 9 A.M., and march [illegible] streets, when the use of

MANDRAKE BITTERS

Will give immediate relief.

After constipation follows

Biliousness, Dyspepsia,

The special train from Adrian has been engaged, and the time arranged. It will leave Adrian at 7:55 A.M., arriving in Tecumseh about half past eight. People from there can stay all day, take in the whole show and return in the evening after the fireworks. The special will leave Tecumseh at 9:57 P.M.

The committee on decoration extend a request to the business firms of the village to decorate their respective places of business in their own way. This course will lighten the labors of the committee and will be much more satisfactory to the business houses.

Mr. F. G. Delaney, of Norfalk, Va., writes: "It gives me great pleasure to experience once more that gloriously good feeling of perfect health. I was buried in despair, my back constantly pained me, and from head to foot I felt thoroughly ill. I could not walk across the yard without fatigue. Nothing I ate agreed with me. Doctors could do me no good. I tried Brown's Iron Bitters. They have given me perfect health and strength."

TRIMMING the shade trees has been the special business of the Marshal for the past few days.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH. JUN. 29, 1882.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

GUITEAU'S time will come to-morrow.

COMMENCEMENT exercises this evening at the Opera House.

MISS ANNIE ROBBINS will spend commencement week in Tecumseh.

J. H. SHERRARD has gone to Nevada on a business and pleasure trip.

MISS CLARA CAMPBELL, of Chicago, is visiting friends here for a few days.

A PLEASANT lawn social was given by the Presbyterian ladies last Tuesday evening.

E. C. SMITH and wife, of Toledo, were the guests of Mrs. C. M. Burlingame over Sunday.

MISS JENNIE FRAZER returned from Concord last Saturday and will spend the summer vacation in Tecumseh.

MISSES MINNIE AND ALLIE HAMILTON, of White Pigeon, are visiting Mrs. Lydia Hamilton, in Brownville.

PROF. E. B. FAIRFIELD JR. has been employed as Superintendent of the Grand Haven schools for next year.

PEOPLE will witness the best bicycle riding ever seen in this village if they will come here to celebrate the Fourth.

THE reception of the graduting class will be held at the home of Eda James on Monday evening next, July 3d.

THE Japanese fire works to be exhibited here on the afternoon of the 4th will be worth coming twenty miles to see.

OWING to the graduating exercises this evening the prayer meeting at the M. E. church will be postponed to Friday evening.

THE Davey Dramatic troupe will give two entertainments here on the Fourth, afternoon and evening. Popular prices of admission.

THE Lake Shore railway will sell tickets at half fare for the Fourth, good July 3d, 4th, and returning good until the 5th inclusive.

MRS. H. KEYSER'S S. S. class will serve refreshments on the 4th of July in Miss Sena Drew's dress making rooms over Munger's store.

CHARLIE SPAFFORD will dish out cream to all those who wish to sample it at Tecumseh in rooms over Wright's drug store, on the coming Fourth.

UNCLE GEORGE SHEELER, of Cambridge, gave us a call yesterday. He does not visit Tecumseh very often, but he is always welcome when he does come.

THE broom brigade drill at the Opera House on the Fourth will be one of the grand attractions of the day.—The Opera House will be too small to hold the crowd.

THE new telephone line is certain to work well. Three messages were transmitted to Detroit yesterday and several to Adrian, all of which went through without a hitch.

LIGHTNING struck some of the telephone poles near Pennington's corners last Saturday, and prostrated the line so that it partially destroyed the circuit between here and Saline.

MR. JOHN A. FLICK has erected a fine monument in our Tecumseh cemetery in memory of his late wife. It is a fine terra cotta, life size figure, and is an ornament to our cemetery.

PEOPLE who have heard Col. May will certainly wish to hear him again. Those who have never had the pleasure should not fail to be here on the Fourth and listen to his oration.

BILLS' grove, where the morning exercises will be held on the Fourth, will be provided with plenty of seats and a commodious platform to accommodate the crowd. It is a beautiful grove.

PERSONS wishing floral decorations for commencement week will please leave orders as early as possible with J. J. Orr at Wright's drug store, where the choicest selections will be promptly furnished.

MRS. R. G. BACON, Mrs. A. W. McIntyre and Mrs. Frank W. French were called from Toledo, by telegraph, to the sick bed of their father, James Conorton, who is lying very low.—There is no hope of his recovery.

THE races which will come off here on the afternoon of the Fourth are likely to be well patronized. Horses are expected from all parts of the county and people will have the opportunity of witnessing some fine trotting.

THE Davey Dramatic Club, the best of Detroit's dramatic clubs help us celebrate, and will greatly contribute to the general amusement of the glorious 4th, by giving two performances, afternoon and evening. The Davey have a good reputation and come well recommended, and those that avail themselves of this opportunity of seeing this organization will certainly greatly enjoy it and will feel well paid for the time so spent. For the program see advertisement and posters.

BILLS' race track will be a splendid place for the sports and games on the afternoon of the Fourth.

GEO. STACY struck a telephone conversation yesterday with Bert Tribou whom he found in Pittman's coal office in Detroit. They enjoyed a good five minutes talk. "Well," says Bert, as he finished his talk, "if this don't beat the Dutch."

WE regret to learn that Sam James is going to leave us. He has taken a position in the office of the Michigan Malleable Iron Works, of Detroit, and will leave soon for his new field of labor. His friends here although regretting his departure will heartily wish him the best of success in his new location.

COL. WOOD, of Adrian, will entertain the people on the Fourth with a show of his own in the building west of McCowen's furniture store. He will be here on the 3d and 4th. It will consist of a mechanical exhibition of 1500 moving figures, and other minor attractions. Prices to suit the times. There will evidently be no dearth of amusements here on the Fourth.

HEADQUARTERS CO. C,
1st Reg. M. S. T.
TECUMSEH, June 26, 1882.

Gen. Order No. 1.

I. In compliance with Gen. Order No. 4, from Headquarters 1st Reg't, this company will assemble at the armory in uniform, July 4th, at 8:30 o'clock for a street parade.

II. There will be two drills a week, Monday and Wednesday evenings. Let every man whose name is on the company rolls turn out to these drills.

By order of A. D. LAWRENCE,
Capt. Comd'g Company.

THE following pupils of the Ridgeway village school have been neither absent nor tardy during the week ending June 23, 1882: Edna, Jeddie and Arthur VanVleet, Della Freer, Flora Smith, Hattie Wells, Minnie Barrett, Ella Sutton, George Arner, Georgie Clark, Floyd Smith, Teddie Fletcher, Ada and Earl Kilpatrick, Willie Ratson, Willie Allen, Bertie Cadmus, Brewster Clark, Vernie Allen, Linn Coryell, Bessie Barrett, Lottie Arner, Frankie Heath, Willie Smith, Louisa Smith, Nettie Barrett, Ella Ousterhut, Artie Reed.

LARGE sale of agricultural implements.—To the farmers of Lenawee county and vicinity.—We wish to call your attention to the large stock of agricultural implements and farm machinery recently purchased by us of E. V. DePuy. We will sell this stock at very low prices, as we must and will close out at once. You will find our agent, Mr. J. M. Green, who will be ready and willing to show you goods and make prices that will suit you. Give him a call before placing your orders elsewhere. McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., by W. F. Cowhen, Gen. Agent.

THE Tecumseh telegraph company held a meeting last evening in the office of Dr. Hou[illegible] for the purpose of perfecting the organization of the company. A constitution was adopted which gives the management of the affairs of the company to a board of six directors. The directors chosen at the meeting were R. [illegible] House, R. J. W. Bowen, P. S. McKinnon, W. B. Keyser, L. G. North and P. Bills. It was decided to go on with the work of erecting the line immediately as far as the right of way is secured.—The officers are President—R. B. House.

Vice Pres.—L. G. North.
Sec.—P. S. McKinnon.
Treas.—W. B. Keyser.
Manager—R. J. W. Bowen.

Administrator's Sale.

Peter Lott, will sell at auction on the premises of Lucinda Bodine, deceased, at Clinton, Saturday, July [illegible] at 12 o'clock, M., the following property: Brick house, barn and two acres of land within the corporation limits, bureau and glass, bed-room set, large amount of carpeting, 50 yds. ingrain, 70 yds. rag; 1 doz. sofa bottom chairs, 10 cane bottom; 2 feather beds, center table, linen table cloths, bed clothing, crockery, glassware etc., 1 hair spring mattress, two stoves, one large rocking chair, and other household articles. Usual terms of sale. Ben Reynolds, auctioneer.

The Alumni Reunion.

The regular annual reunion of the Alumni Society will be held at the Opera House to-morrow evening. The program will consist of the following:

Music.
Welcome Address—By the Presid't.
Response—Jennie Nyland.
Music.
Oration—L. Cass Miller.
Music.
Essay—Miss Etta Wilson.
History—Mrs. H. S. Lee.
Music.

The musical part of the program will be furnished by different members of the Alumni, and will be mostly of an instrumental character. It has been decided to omit the supper this year, as the large number of officers absent rendered it impossible to make this a success, but the public exercises of to-morrow evening will be fully up to the standard of preceding years. We have no doubt they will call out a good sized audience.

MRS. E. H. MERRITT is visiting in Tecumseh.

MISS LINA WELLER, of Troy, Ohio, is the guest of Miss Lyda James during commencement week.

DAVE MACHAM celebrated his seventh business anniversary Tuesday, having occupied the shop he now uses seven years that day. He has always enjoyed a good trade and we wish him as many more prosperous years of business.

TRAINS on the Jackson Branch from the north will run exactly right to accommodate all who may wish to visit Tecumseh on the Fourth. People can reach here at eight o'clock in the morning and return in the evening after the fireworks.

WE are indebted to John J. Orr for a beautiful pedestal of flowers made by Mrs. Nathan Smith, of Adrian. It shows what Mrs. Smith can do in the line of floral ornaments. Orders for her work can be left with John Orr, at Wright's drug store.

WE call attention to the card of O. P. Bills & Co. which appears in another column. Mr. Bills seems entirely at home in his new position. J. N. Satterthwaite fits into the cashier's chair admirably, and the firm is well pleased with the outlook.

W. H. SINK has been making some more improvements in his house again, and this time in the way of ceiling decoration in his dining room. The work was done by Mr. J. L. Trann, the paper furnished by C. A. Wright & Co. Mr. Sink has now one of the handsomest rooms in Tecumseh.

THE fantastic cavalcade for the 4th is being well worked up. The prospects indicate a very large procession and it will certainly be a "big thing." Three prizes will be given for the most outlandish costumes, and those who intend to enter are requested to give their names to Jehiel Davidson without delay.

THE chairman of the Decoration Committee for the coming Fourth would respectfully request all who are interested in beautifying the streets, their stores or dwellings, to leave orders for trees with H. W. Stevens, S. P. Hosmer or P. S. McKinnon. Let Chicago street glow with flags and emblems of patriotism.

SHIRLEY, a son of Chas. F. Smith, while playing with a toy pistol this forenoon, accidentally discharged the same, the bullet entering the left foot and lodging deeply under the tendons. He was at once conveyed to Dr. Woodward's office, who extracted the bullet and the boy is now doing well. He thinks he won't fool with toy pistols any more.

CHILDREN'S Sunday was finely observed at the Universalist church last Sunday. The floral decorations were more elaborate and beautiful than usual. Mrs. Spaulding furnished three handsome pieces, and the HERALD office loaned one beautiful design which was presented by John Orr from the green house of Mrs. Nathan Smith.

THE State telephone line was connected with Ann Arbor and Saline last Saturday. The line was completed to Adrian on Monday and Tuesday afternoon a connection was established with Adrian. The office connections are but temporary now, but the line will be permanently finished and fitted for business by the last of this week. We feel entire confidence that it will work satisfactorily.

NEWS FROM NAVIN.

Dr. L. H. Goodrich, of Coldwater, passed last Sabbath with C. M. Burlingame of this village, who is a brother-in-law of his. Dr. Goodrich is the same person who saw Mayor Navin in Prescott, Arizona in April last. Navin then passed by the name of "Stanford," and represented himself as a New York lawyer just admitted to the bar, who had come west to locate and grow up with the country." He commenced reading up on territorial law at an office in Prescott and remained there five or six weeks. He then went into a mining scheme from which he expected to make a fortune, and went to San Francisco. While there he sent the letter of introduction to Dr. Goodrich by Dr. Gross, which has already appeared in the papers. We have seen the letter and compared it with some of Navin's writing in our possession. It is unmistakably Navin's writing. Dr. Goodrich became quite well acquainted with Tom, as he came quite frequented his office almost daily to read the Coldwater papers, in which he found a good deal of news about the Adrian scandal. "Stanford" seemed to have his pockets full of money while he was in Prescott, and was rapidly becoming one of the leading men of the place. Stanford started east to wind up his mining enterprise only a day before the authorities in Adrian learned his identity. We send this intelligence to Stanford's Adrian creditors. He evidently intends to make a big fortune out of his mining enterprise, return to Adrian and pay his creditors in full, build a new Opera House on flat-iron park, and be elected to Congress.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

TENTH WEEK.

All green and fair the summer lies,
Just budded from the bed of spring;
With tender blue of wistful skies,
And winds which softly sing.
—SUSAN COOLIDGE.

The zephyr wanioned round the bean,
And bore its fragrant sweets along.
—BURNS.

He pig aint much on 'rithmetic, but he knows de nuthin' way to de co'n field.—J. A. MAGON.

"Now then," said Columbus, as he wound his sore thumb with a red flannel rag and knocked the Captain over with the boot jack, on arising from his Sunday dinner, "I want to read to you my new essay on "Beans, Squash and Pumpkins" that I have prepared for the Grange meetin'. I haint much confidence in your ability as a farmer, but your opinion on the quality of an essay ought to be good for somethin'. Here it is—

MR. PRESIDENT AND FELLOW LABORERS IN THE GRANGE:—The first thing to be did on this momentous occasion is to return to you the grateful thanks which well up from the bottom of my boots for the honor you have conferred both on me individually and the great name I represent in selectin' me to orate before you on this glorious agricultural subject. Omitting all preliminaries Mr. President, I will, as Cato said when he crossed the Rubicon, plunge in medicus res, I will wade right slap into the middle of the subject. Beans is not to be sneezed at—they constitute a staple article of farm produce—they're good for stock, and as a diet for farm laborers, they can't be beat. Beans, Mr. President, was riz as long ago as the days of Josephus on the shores of the Caspian Sea. Alexander the Great used beans for army rations. Demosthenes was a great lover of beans, and he would practice his great speeches on the sea shore with beans in his mouth. Beans flourished in Egypt before the time of the Christian era, and they was raised all through Southern Europe during the dark ages. The monks in the monastaries lived on beans. Durin' the great mental eclipse and before the invention of grape and cannister, artillery squads used beans for amunition. Beans are of various kinds, Mr. President. There is white beans, lima beans, black beans, speckled beans, beans that are husked before use, and beans that folks use with the husks on.—Beans, Mr. President"—upon looking for the next page Ichabod found that the Captain had devoured his manuscript and there was not a scrap left as large as a white bean. The rehearsal was therefore postponed.

Monday, June 6th.—Columbus harrowed and fitted a patch in the west lot for beans. I got a bushel of the golden-eyed mammoth top-knot, Beersheba bean, just introduced by Peter Henderson and imported by him direct from Palestine. They cost only five dollars a peck. Ellic rolled the beans in camphor water and planted them. The moon changed this afternoon, so Ichabod got out the potatoes that were sprouted up in the cellar to plant and found them grown together with new sprouts. He cut them apart with the pruning shears and Ellic planted them.

Tuesday, June 7th—A very rainy day. Columbus nailed an old hat in the kitchen window, made a churn dasher, put a patch on the buggy cushion, sheared Tiger's mane preparatory to warm weather, greased his boots, helped Ellic grind the axe, put a new leg in the saw horse, trimmed the babies corns, and commenced work on an essay entitled "How to raise Sour-Krout." Ellic cut wood.

Wednesday June 8th—A drizzling, damp day. Columbus and Ellic took mowing machine apart and put it in running order. They washed it carefully with Kerosene oil, sandpapered the drive wheels, filed down the axle-tree, replaced six broken sections with new ones, put in a new tongue and painted it green. I never saw an article of farm machinery worth having that was not painted green. Green is the best paint for farm use. It harmonizes with nature, is economical to use, and is a dead sure thing on bugs and other vermin.

Thursday, June 9th—As it cleared up to day after a heavy storm I concluded to devote the day to weed-pulling. The men have been so rushed with more important work that the weeding has been neglected. The pig weeds are four feet high in the asparagras bed; the burdocks in the pieplant are as high as Ichabod's head; the corn is buried in a mat of timothy grass, and the pursley in the beet patch is thicker than the hair on Tiger's back. Ellic did a good days work, and Columbus would have pulled every weed on the farm before night if a crick in the back had not taken him about nine A. M. After that he was confined to those weeds that stood four feet high.

Friday, June 10th.—Columbus and Ellec trimmed the raspberry bushes in the forenoon. Ichabod got three thorns in his left thumb and lost the rivet out of the pruning shears, so in the afternoon the boys planted sweet corn and cucumbers. I got half a dozen ears of the Granite hill sweet corn, warranted to mature in 30 days, price fifty cents an ear, and a few mammoth long yellow cucumbers at ten cents per seed.

Saturday, June 11th.—Ellic planted ten hills of Early Vermont squash and ten hills of Wolverine pumpkins in the forenoon. These squash are warranted to be as large as a water pail by the fourth of July, and one of these pumpkins when grown will fill a wash-tub. Columbus and Giles Tallman sheared the sheep. Giles did the shearing, while Columbus tied up the wool and counted the fleeces. When the boys came to dinner they discovered that the ten shoats had broken through the lane gate, dug a hole under the fence, and had been cultivating corn all day. The trouble was they cultivated in the rows, instead of between the rows, and about three-fourths of the corn hills had been turned upside down. It took the three men and Tiger, with the help of three neighboring boys, three hours to get the pigs out of that field.

The pig is poor in logic,
Likewise in the rule of three,
But he'll take a line to the corn field
As straight as a honey bee.

Going to His Grave.

There he goes again direct to a saloon and pours down another heavy draught of strong drink, not so much because his appetite demands it, but for the artifical buoyancy it produces the after effect of which leaves him more miserable than before; it is this dreadful practice that is daily sending thousands to their graves. A remedy for all this is found in the true friend of temperance,—the best and purest of all medicines,—Electric Bitters. Sold by all Druggists at 50 cents.

For all inflammation of the bronchial tubes or bad colds, Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a splendid remedy. A few drops should be taken clear on sugar every three or four hours, and bathe the throat and chest two or three times a day. It speedily allays the irritations, ticklings and itching, and creates a healthy action, and a complete cure is readily effected.

A Bashful Man.

Senator Sebastian of Arkansas, says the Louisville Commercial, was a native of Hickman county, Tennessee. On one occasion a member of congress was lamenting his bashfulness and awkwardness. "Why," said the senator from Rackensack, "you don't know what bashfulness is. Let me tell you a story, and when I get through I will stand the bob if you don't agree that you never knew anything about bashfulness and its baneful effects. I was the most bashful boy west of the Alleghanies. I wouldn't look at a girl, much less speak to a maiden; but for all that I fell desperately in love with a sweet, beautiful neighbor girl. It was a desirable match on both sides, and the old folks saw the drift, and fixed it up. I thought I should die just thinking of it. I was a gawky, awkward, country lout, about 19 years old. She was an intelligent, refined, and fairly well educated girl, in a country and at a time when the girls had superior advantages, and were therefore superior in culture to the boys. I fixed the day as far as I could have it put off. I lay awake in a cold perspiration as the time drew near, and shivered with agony as I thought of the terrible ordeal.

"The dreadful day came. I went through with the programme somehow in a dazed, confused, mechanical sort of way, like an automaton booby through a supper where I could eat nothing, and through such games as 'possum pie,' 'Sister Phœbe,' and all that sort of thing. The guests one by one departed and my hair began to stand on end. Beyond the awful curtain of Isis lay the terrible unknown. My blood grew cold and boiled by turns. I was in a fever and then an ague, pale and flushed by turns. I felt like fleeing to the woods, spending the night in the barn, leaving for the west never to return. I was deeply devoted to Sallie. I loved her harder than a mule can kick, but that dreadful ordeal I could not, I dared not stand it. Finally the last guest was gone, the bride retired, the family gone to bed, and I was left alone with the old man. 'John,' said he, 'you can take that candle; you will find your room just over this. Good night, John, and may the Lord have mercy on your soul,' and with a mischievous twinkle of his fine gray eye the old man left the room. I mentally said, 'Amen' to his 'Heaven help you,' and when I heard him close a distant door, staggered to my feet and seized the farthing dip with a nervous grasp. I stood for some minutes contemplating my terrible fate, and the inevitable and speedy doom about to overwhelm me. I knew it could not be avoided, and yet I hesitated to meet my fate like a man. I stood so long that three love-letters had grown on the wick of the tallow dip and a winding sheet was decorating the side of the brass candlestick.

"A happy thought struck me. I hastily climbed the stair, marked the position of the landing and the door of the bridal chamber. I would have died before I would have disrobed in that holy chamber, where awaited me a trembling and beautiful girl, a blushing maiden, 'clothed upon' with her own beauty and modesty, and her flowing robe de nuit. I would make the usual preparations without, blow out the light, open the door, and friendly night would shield my shrinking modesty and bashfulness, and grateful darkness at least mitigate the horror of the situation. It was soon done. Preparations for retiring were few and simple in their character in Hickman, altogether consisting of disrobing, and owing to a scarcity of cloth in those days, man was somewhere near the Adamic state when he was prepared to woo sweet sleep. The dreadful hour had come; I was ready. I blew out the light, grasped the door-knob with a deathly grip and nervous clutch; one moment and it would be over. One moment and it wasn't over by a d—n sight. I leaped within, and there around a glowing hickory fire, with candles brightly burning on the mantel and bureau was the blushing bride, surrounded by six lovely bridesmaids."

"Pure Fruit Syrups."

A prominent down-town druggist was asked about the purity of so-called soda water, and of the syrups used with them. "It is two-thirds bogus," he replied. "Soda water as usually prepared contains no soda in any form. Pure water with carbonic acid gas is all that it is. Bicarbonate of soda is sometimes used. Nearly every druggist makes his own soda water, and I know of one case in which the proprietor of a large drug store has sunk an artesian well for the purpose of having plenty of water."

"What about syrups?" "In most cases they are unfit to drink, positively injurious, and very often made from an inferior quality of drugs. The so-called pure fruit syrups, in nine cases out of ten, do not contain a smell of the fruit they are supposed to be made of, but they are concocted with such skill as to deceive the sensitive taste."

"How many soda-water stands are there in New York?" "Thousands; one place alone that I know of sold over 3,000 glasses of soda a day last Summer. Profitable? Well, I should think so."—New York Mail.

A Competent Costumer.

"Is the gentleman who knows everything in?" stammered a vision of golden hair and sea blue eyes, as she stood timidly beside the managing editor's desk yesterday afternoon.

"Everything about what?" asked the editor, clawing around under his desk for his shoes and trying to hide his stocking feet under him. "Upon which particular branch do you seek information?"

"I don't exactly know what to do," pouted the strawberry lips. "Pa says I can only have one dress this spring, and I don't know how to make it up. I thought the gentleman who answers questions could tell me."

"H'm!" muttered the managing editor. "He has gone up in Maine to find out why geese always walk in single file. An 'Anxious Inquirer' wants to know. What kind of a dress had you thought of getting?"

"That's what I want to know. I want something that will look well with terra cotta gloves."

"Yes, yes," murmured the editor. "Then you should get one of these green things with beads that turn all kinds of colors, and some fringes and fixings of that kind."

"Would you have it but princess or wear it with a polonaise?" she inquired, looking at him searchingly.

"You—you might have it princess around the neck and a row of polonaises at the bottom," suggested the editor. "That's going to be very fashionable, and a couple of hip pockets would set it off royally."

"I don't know," murmured the beauty. "I haven't seen any of that style. Do you know whether panniers are worn bouffant this season, or whether the skirt is tight?"

"Oh, certainly!" replied the editor. "They are made with all the bouffants you can get on 'em. Some have even sixteen button bouffants, and there was a lady in here yesterday who had a pannier that came clean up to her neck. I should have it pretty bouffant if it was my dress."

"Well," stammered the blushing blossom, "would you box plait the skirt or shirr it?"

"Shirr it, by all means!" exclaimed the editor. "Shirr it straight up and down, and fasten it with these loops of black tape."

"You mean frogs?" asked the beauty.

"No, no. These big loops that slip over two buttons. That sets off the shirrs and gives a sort of tout to the ensemble," and the editor leaned back and smiled superior.

"Don't you think revers of a lighter shade would look pretty?" she inquired.

"They'll do to fix up the back, but I wouldn't put 'em on the front," answered the editor sagely. "Revers are very well to trim a hat with, but they don't set off a dress front.

"How would you have the corsage?"

"I wouldn't have any at all. You would look much better without one."

"Sir!" she exclaimed, rising.

"Oh, if you insist, you might have a small one, certainly, not over two inches long, for short dresses are the style now."

"You—you don't seem to understand—" she commenced.

"Oh, don't I?" he retorted. "That's what I'm here for. I think there is nothing so lamentable as to see a young lady dragging her corsage through the mud and dust. Still, if you want one, you should have it, so you can take it off when you go on the street and only wear it at home. They are hard to handle and not one woman in a hundred can kick her corsage gracefully."

"s—I am very much obliged to you," she murmured. "You are very good, I'm sure."

"Don't mention it," replied the editor politely, "I think when you get it shirred and revered and polonaised and princessed, you'll like it very much. You might get a sash and some big buttons to put on behind, of if you'd like another style better, you might trim the whole front with bouffants and wear the pannier for a hat."

"Oh, thank you, sir!" exclaimed the blushing bud, as she scuttled down stairs.

"Swipes!" roared the managing editor, with a complacent smile and a glance of approval at himself in the glass, "Swipes, you may tell the foreman to send me a proof of the Fashion Notes as soon as they come in. I have observed that a great many errors have crept in lately."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Military Terms Explained.

Fatigue duty means details made from companies for duty, work of all kinds, such as loading and unloading quarter-master and commissary wagons, repairing roads, ditches, etc. Police duty is the keeping of the camp in order, sweeping, etc., and is generally performed by the old guard, though sometimes a special detail is made for the purpose. A field work is a work of dirt thrown up for the purpose of affording protection from the enemy's fire. The best order for firing with the breech-loading rifles is in open order, as skirmishers. If a call sounds for a soldier fires only when he sees something to shoot at. File closers are non-commissioned officers or men who are in rear of company, and their duties are to check all disorders, keep the ranks well closed up, and to caution those who are firing too high. File leaders never take part in firing unless the command is hard pressed, at close quarters, and when every available man is needed. Tactics is the art of moving troops in the presence of an enemy. Strategy is the science of conducting operations of war out of sight of enemy. An alignment is the line upon which troops are formed or dressed, and a point of apput is the point of rest toward which companies are dressed. A pivot is the fixed or movable point upon which a change of direction is made. A deployment is the forming of a column of twos or fours into line. Disembarkment is the forming from line into column.

The Clerk Who Knows Everything.

A newly-arrived and singularly-assorted couple at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, consisting of a Londoner and an out-and-out American Western man, stood watching the throng of people coming and going at the marble counter the other evening, and listening with surprise to the endless number of quick questions made to the hotel clerk about trains, rooms and individuals, and his instantaneous replies, when the Englishman broke out with:

"Most extraordinary man, seems to know everybody and everything—wonder if there is any question about railway trains or any person he can't answer?"

"I'll bet half a dozen champagne I'll put him a question about a train he can't answer," said the Westerner.

"Done! I'll stand six to see him go to grass," said Her Majesty's subject.

"Well, here goes, then," and Western stepped up to the marble counter.

"Say! You appear to know everything and everybody; who is there that's going to h——l, and when'll the train start?"

"Charles J. Guiteau; starts June 30, sir," replied the clerk, looking the querist right in the eye without moving a muscle.

"Well, I reckon you are about right; but you can't tell me where I can go and get a ticket, can you?"

"Go to the devil!" said the clerk, turning away.

"Mister," said the Western guest, looking over to the blonde book-keeper, after the laughter had subsided, "you can charge six bottles of 'Fiz' in my bill for the use of them gentlemen, for I must weaken on this bet—it's agin me." He withdrew, and the clerk kept answering questions about other more familiar routes with perfect equanimity.—Hotel Gazette.

The Old Rail-Fence.

I am told by foreign tourists that while many of our fences are reflected in those of other lands, the counterpart of the zigzag fence is to be seen in no other country. It is typical of Yankeeland. It is known as the snake or Virginia fence, and as the relic of a lavish era of unlimited forestry. History does not chronicle the name of its inventor, but I have long since learned to cherish a profound respect for the memory of this primitive rail-splitter the picture of an untutored backwoodsman; and I never follow the course of one of these fences without feeling a certain consciousness that its original builder must have seen his work through eyes as artistic as well as practical. The careless abandon of its lines—a repetition of curves in which absolute repetition is continually defied by the capricious convolution of the grain—for there are no two rails made in the same mould—and their satiny sheen, their weather-born stains of moss and lichen, and the ever-changing play of lights and shows from their waving weeds and vines make the old rail-fence truly an object of real beauty in our landscape. Often have I lingered in its angles, and a hundred times have I thought of the host of pictures and reminiscences which might fill a fence corner.—Holland.

At the Eve.

Embarrassment at the mistake is very apt to cause another. After his first mistake a man is fortunate if he can keep still or get out of it before there is any chance for a further blunder: but we do not see how the perplexed clergyman in this story could very well have done either. The Troy Times says:

The late Rev. Dr. Halley was distinguished for the elicity of his public utterances, but was not proof against embarrassment, as is shown by an anecdote which he himself related with gusto.

Soon after the doctor came to this country from Scotland, he was asked to officiate at a funeral. Now funeral customs among the Presbyterians of Scotland do not include a ceremony at the grave, and when Dr. Halley arrived at the cemetery he supposed his duties were ended.

The coffin was lowered, but the relatives and friends of the deceased man did not disperse, but cast expectant glances toward Dr. Halley.

The good doctor could not understand the cause of this delay, and when the undertaker addressed to him an obsequious bow and smile, the clergyman became decidedly nervous as he returned the bow.

Finally it dawned upon him that he was expected to do something, and in a whisper he asked the undertaker what something might be.

"Say that the friends of the deceased wish you to return thanks to those who have attended the funeral," said the master of ceremonies.

"The deceased wishes me to return thanks to the friends who are present," rang out in the Scotch accents of the minister, and it was some time before he understood why the mourners smiled.

An Intoxicating Perfume.

"Is is not beautiful, sweetheart?"

"What?" asked George W. Simpson, looking tenderly into the deep blue eyes of Daphne McCarthy as they were raised to his, and glancing around in a nervous, steer-caught-in-the-corn way.

"Why the sweet perfume that is being wafted to us on the June air," said the girl, shifting her chewing gum as she spoke. "Do you not feel the sensuous languor that is all about us—the subtle perfume that seems to have kissed the air with dewy fragrance?"

The wistful, fear-haunted look came again into the man's face. He sniffed the air in several directions, and there came upon the perfect features of his Wabash-avenue face a smile of calm content. "Yes, darling," he said, bending over the girl, "I tumble now."

"And what is this perfume, George?" the girl asked. "Can you not tell me, darling?"

"You bet I can, my angel," replied George, speaking in tones of passionate tenderness. "They are going to have corned beef for supper in the next house."—Chicago Tribune.

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases are from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system. For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and counterfeits said to be just as good. For Diabetes, ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

95 Per Cent.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stands it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.
IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.
IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rate charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. Arsenic for the Complexion.

"Are you ever called upon by women to give them something to improve their complexion?" asked a New York reporter of a city physician.

"Quite often, as a matter of course. Women are always looking for something to intensify their beauty. They are not to blame for it; the first inquiry most men make about a woman is whether or not she is pretty."

"Do you prescribe arsenic for that purpose?"

"Not as a beautifier. In the treatment of certain true skin diseases, however, Fowler's solution is often used, and rightly managed is a valuable remedy. But arsenic is often prescribed for malaria, neuralgia, and dyspepsia."

"Yes, arsenic does sometimes, not always, produce the effect ascribed to it. Its beautifying powers, however, if such they be, are much exaggerated. It is possible, but not probable, that a physician would give arsenic to a woman who wished for it as something with which to heighten her charms at the expense of her health. No respectable practitioner would do it. There are any number of old women and quacks to attend to that sort of thing, and the number of those who use arsenic in this way is considerable. I have prescribed sulphur in such cases half a dozen times, but never afterward heard of my fair patients. Stop! One of them did return. She said that my medicine was not strong enough. 'Arsenic was good,' she had been told, and she not only asked me for it, but was indignant when I refused to write a prescription."

"The reasons for not giving arsenic in such cases should be obvious enough. The patient always adopts the principle of the more arsenic the more beauty. It is not, by the way, a habit confined to women. I know of two cases in which arsenic was used by young men for the same purpose. I have had several cases of women who had seriously injured themselves with arsenic all of them within seven or eight years. Twenty years ago they were rare. The symptoms in most of these cases are very severe. The trouble begins with nausea and abdominal pains. Then the eyes redden, and the upper lids become thickened, having taken on a dropsical character, which soon extends over the whole body. Frequently the arsenic produces severe skin eruptions. The nervous system in time becomes seriously involved, and wasting of the flesh, falling out of the hair, and, sometimes, paralysis follow. Young women should be careful how they meddle with Fowler's solution."

A druggist said that calls for arsenic were not infrequent, and came quite as often from middle-aged as from young women. "I never sell it to them," he added, "without a prescription. I know, however, that it is sold for a beautifier, and I have reason to believe that it is bought of the wholesale druggists, put up in bottles, and disposed of by peddlers of nostrums, who, no doubt get high prices for it."

Nilsson's Reappearance.

The world jogs on with such hot haste, says a London correspondent, that it seems no longer than three days ago that I went to the Albert hall to hear Christine Nilsson sing the garden scene from "Faust," this being her first appearance in public since the disastrous accident which has brought this great prima donna the sympathy of kind hearts all over the civilized world. On entering the colossal circus of music opposite the grand old park, we were presented by attendants with a hall-bill, which announced that, in consequence of the laceration of her feelings, Mme. Nilsson found herself unable to don theatric costume, but would sing the scene otherwise as announced. The entrance of the admired vocalist was the signal for a touching demonstration. She looked so pale, so sad! A Marguerite with a difference; a Gretchen, guiltless of her own tragic fate! Tears fell from the eyes of sympathizing auditors, and when the silver-voiced songstress began to warble those exquisite, dreamy, detached phrases which preface all the lovely music of Marguerite in this scene, it was not difficult to hear the obstruction of some choking sobs in the otherwise brilliant voice. The stage was prettily decorated with flowering shrubs, which lent some idea of a garden to the platform; but how lame and unprofitable in the dramatic sense is such a thing as an operatic scene in the midst of a morning concert! Even the sympathy the audience felt for Nilsson and the intense admiration one can not choose but offer this peerless artist were insufficient to brighten with the glamour of verisimilitude this hybrid thing, a drama in which the actors personate themselves, and can neither be satisfactorily looked upon as Faust and Marguerite nor yet as Mr. Maas and Mme. Nilsson. The best thing of the performance was Nilsson's singing of "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," in which her chaste style and pure sympathetic voice were heard to utterly perfect advantage.

How to Get Along.

Never fool in business matters
Pay as you go.
Do not kick every one in your path.
Learn to think and act for yourself.
Do not stop to tell stories during business hours.
Keep ahead of rather than behind the times.
Always use your own brains rather than those of others.
Have habits of order, system, regularity, and also promptness.
Do not meddle with business of which you know nothing.
No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons.
Help others whenever you can, but never give what you cannot afford to simply because it is fashionable.
Learn to say no. There is no necessity of snapping it out dog-fashion, but say it respectfully and firmly.
If you have a place of business be found there when wanted.
More miles can be made in one day by going steadily than by stopping.

An Impossibility.

His Wife.

It is not necessary to go to works of fiction for pathetic scenes to show how the demon of intemperance can destroy the happiest homes and make miserable lives. Dramas of this kind are happening about us every day. The following account of a recent scene in Boston could not well be more touching. A writer in the Boston Journal says that a little before dark, a few evenings since, a group of a dozen men, with one woman in their midst, stood on one of the side paths of the Common. Near the woman, who was young, neatly dressed and of intelligent appearance, was a man about thirty years of age, whose staring eyes and vacant expression showed that he was intoxicated.

A stalwart policeman had his hand on the drunken man's collar, while the woman clung to him and besought him to let her husband go.

This is what had happened a moment before: As the staggering man, half led, half supported by the woman, turned from the Tremont Street mall, he half struck, half pushed her, so that she fell violently to the ground. She arose and again was thrown down, but in spite of all clung to his side, and walked with him, he striking and pushing her as they went.

In a minute a dozen men were rushing after him, and it would have gone hard with him if a policeman had not been in the front rank. As he stood there with the policeman's hand on his collar, he did not utter a word, but stared about stupidly at the men, whose angry faces and clenched hands showed how strong was their feeling, and there were rough-looking fellows among them, too.

But what was the use?—every blow given him would have made the poor little wife suffer ten times more than he.

When the burly policeman had mastered his indignation sufficiently to permit him to speak, he blurted out, "What do you mean by striking a woman?"

"She's m' wife," was the sullen reply.

"And what if she is, you brute! Isn't that all the more reason why you should not harm her?" roared the policeman.

And right there came in that touch of feminine nature by which thousands of times wives have aroused at once the anger and admiration of the officers of the law.

"Oh, he didn't hit me!" and then, when a dozen men said, "I saw him do it," and she saw how useless it was to deny it, her flushed and tear-stained face dropped and she said, tremblingly:

"I mean—he didn't hurt me."

Then the policeman said to the besotted wretch, "Come along!" and started as if to drag him off, but in an instant his wife was upon them crying and pleading that she might be allowed to take him away.

"He's always good to me," she cried, "and he wouldn't have done it only the liquor was in him. We came in from Cambridge this afternoon to look for a tenement, and all the way in he was talking about our little place; but he has some friends, and then—then," and she could not say any more.

What was the big, soft-hearted policeman to do? His feelings were like those of the angry, sympathetic men about him when he looked at the man his grasp fastened and his body straightened; when he turned to the woman his hold relaxed, and at last he let go, and pushing lightly towards her, said:

"Well, take him!" and then, to those standing around—"It does seem to me, and I've seen a good many cases like that, that women are a queer lot. It seems as if the more you licked 'em the better they like you."

Then the little woman drew the drunken man's arm through her own and started off up the hill, and if he had abused her while he was out of sight, the owners of the score of eyes that were eagerly following them will have had an account to settle with him.

Don't Sign Papers.

People who thoughtlessly sign documents often put their property in peril, and many men have been ruined by indorsing for a friend. How often have good-natured men's names been diminished by obligations incurred carelessly or without thought of consequences. During the rebellion the steamer Jessie was seized because it was supposed she was a blockade runner. The case was delayed in the courts for eighteen years, a fact which is very discreditable to our lawyers. In the meantime all the parties defending the ownership of the vessel disappeared. The only responsible person that could be found was a young girl of seventeen, whose father was one of the bonds. An obligation of twenty thousand dollars has been entered up, which this young woman will be forced to pay unless the law somehow proposes to save her. She will be crippled financially, as that sum is greater than her inheritance. Here is a case in which a person is punished who is entirely innocent of any offence. But the moral of this instance is: Don't put your name on bonds or notes, for it may injure not only yourself, but your innocent children.

The Ring Jules Favre Wore.

The late Jules Favre in 1851 and again in 1874 conducted before the French Court of Appeals the case of the heirs of one of the pseudo Bourbons, Charles William Naundorff, who had claimed to be Charles Louis, Duke of Normandy, son of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette. When he concluded his plea, the French Pretender's daughter presented him with a cameo ring, inscribed with the figure of a centaur drawing a bow, which she said belonged to her father, Louis XVII. This ring M. Favre always wore, and when in 1871 he went to Frankfort to sign the treaty with Germany, Bismarck desired him to seal it in due form. "But I have no seal, said M. Favre; "I am not a sovereign." "But you have a ring there—," "Yes; but—." "Oh, never mind, it will do!" And so the treaty of Frankfort was sealed in behalf of the third Republic with the ring of—possibly—the King of France.

Live Stock and Agricultural Notes.

Fat is of no value as manure.

Hungarian grass, or millet, should not be seeded until the soil is quite warm.

It is asserted that nine-tenths of the foot and ankle ailments of horses are traceable to standing on dry plank floors.

Deeply-rooted crops, as wheat, red clover and mangel, are those best fitted to resist drouth, while shallow-rooted crops, as grass and turnips, are those that suffer most from it.

Professor Atwater states that the best ration for a cow in full flow of milk is 100 parts of corn meal (by weight), 80 parts bran, and 65 parts decorticated (huskless) cotton seed meal.

Horses are social animals, particularly so, in the case of young horses. They thrive best when in the society of others, hence the advantage of pasturing several in one field when practicable.

The beef of Hereford cattle is peculiarly tender and fine grained. For quantity as well as quality of meat they are not excelled. The capability of the breed as quick feeders and economical producers of meat is unquestionable.

A New Jersey farmer reports that a dressing of eight bushels per acre of salt to land badly infested with white grubs, enabled him to raise good crops of corn for three years past, which was impossible previous to this application.

A reader requests a remedy for excessive sweating in horses. This is usually caused by feeding too much corn, and hence the best remedy is to diminish the quantity of corn and vary the feed as much as possible. Some horses, however, are constitutionally subject to sweats.

The best treatment for a mare in foal is to give her moderate exercise daily, care being taken against over-exertion. The food should be good clover and timothy hay, well cut and salted, ground oats and a bran mash mixed with potatoes or other roots. Feed some corn or meal, but not too much, in order to guard against milk fever. See that the colt promptly relieves the udder soon as possible after birth.

Late-cut hay, ordinary straw and other coarse fodders are unquestionably improved by cooking, as it softens the woody fiber and dissolves portions of the starch; and corn meal and other foods rich in starch are also improved by cooking. But in considering the question of economy, although this will pay on a large scale, it is not likely to do so for a few animals, for it costs nearly as much to cook for ten as for fifty head of cattle.

H. B. Preston, Wapping, Conn., expresses the opinion that persons in that State willing to take the necessary trouble to care for the trees can raise peaches now as well as forty years ago, when the fruit was "as plenty and cheap as apples." He has had long experience, and, after many experiments, keeps the borer at bay by an annual application of linseed oil and sulphur mixed to the consistency of paint and put on about a foot up from the ground.

A writer in the Scientific American says: "We clean our premises of the detestable vermin, rats, by making whitewash yellow, with copperas and covering the stone and rafters with it. In every crevice in which a rat may go we put the crystals of the copperas and scatter in the corner of the floor. The result was a perfect stampede of rats and mice. Since that time not a footfall of either rats or mice has been heard around the house."

Keep nursing ewes by themselves and give scalded bran or oatmeal daily. Sugar beets or potatoes, sliced and sprinkled with a quart of middlings or bran for each ewe, will produce abundant and rich milk. Keep lambs where they will have plenty of sunshine. When rough, sheddy wool appears in the fleeces or the wool drops off in locks, the sheep are not healthy, or the food has been too dry and heating. Stop the corn meal and give some linseed oilcake meal: a few potatoes will be useful if roots are not to be had. Give salt frequently and freely.

What Noah's Wife Said.

"Draw near thine ear, I pray thee," said Noah, as he sat smoking his good clay pipe by the fire, after having fed the animals their evening meal and shaken up their bedding. "What would my lord?" replied Mrs. N., drawing near her ear, as commanded. Noah smoked in silence for the space of a minute or two, and then opened his mouth and spoke as follows: "I perceive by the indications, mother, that the storm which was central over the Euphrates will move westerly to the Nile Valley on the morrow, with areas of low barometer and northeasterly winds, and showery weather on the Arabian coast. I have been moved therefor, to jettison a part of our cargo, fearing that our supplies will give out ere the floods shall subside. What animal thinkest thou can best be spared, love?" And Mrs. N. looked out at the window, listened a moment to the pattering drops on the roof, and replied tenderly, "The rain, dear." And at the sound of her voice Noah wept like a child, and the animals wailed in unison, for there was misery unspeakable where all had been so calm and tranquil.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Breakfasts and Lunches.

Breakfasts and luncheons are somewhat more informal than dinner parties, though there is, after all, little difference between a luncheon for which the invitations are sent out some ten days or a week in advance and a dinner, except in the hour at which it is served. Breakfast at home in a refined family circle is one of the pleasantest meals in the day. To be really agreeable, however, it should not be too early. For very early breakfast, the fast I like is the French custom of rolls and coffee in one's own room. But for those who choose to assemble around the family table for the morning meal it can be made a pleasant little feast with no great outlay. As a matter of health, fruit should form a part of this meal, and it is now usual to serve it as the first course. A basket of strawberries or cherries or a melon in the summer, or a nicely-arranged variety of fruit in the winter, pleases the eye as well as the palate. The dessert plates with doilies and finger glasses should be accompanied at every cover by the silver fruit knife and fork. After the fruit comes some kind of meat, with an omelet perhaps, or boiled eggs, and if you choose fried potatoes, hot bread and toast. After the fruit, too, the coffee makes its appearance, and it must be strong and clear if the simplest breakfast is to be a success. At this meal it is quite en regle to open one's letters or to read the morning paper. In short, where only the family or guests who staying in the house are present, it is charmingly informal.

Zuni Method of Managing Husbands.

Among the Zuni Indians, who have recently come to the front by coming East for ocean water, there is said to be a social custom that might be worth adopting in more civilized circles. In Zuni-land the houses belong to the women instead of the men, so a man can marry without first being obliged to buy or hire a house; marrying men are, therefore, abundant among the Zunis. On the other hand a man who marries can only occupy his wife's house during good behavior, the wife having always the right to put an unsavory husband out of doors. This is a privilege that would raise many an American wife from abject slavery to the rank of equal partner in the conjugal firm. But, whether for husband or wife, the Zuni plan is an advantageous one; it encourages early marriages, assures every woman of a home, so that she need not marry merely to get one, and it keeps husbands in order, for almost any man will behave himself if, by so doing, he can avoid the onerous duty of paying rent.

A nihilistic lodging was discovered by the Russian police on Vassia island, and forty-nine persons were arrested and a large quantity of dynamite was seized.

Charles Autobees, the most noted of the frontiersmen of Colorado, died at the age of 80 years, at his home near Fort Raymond. He piloted John C. Fremont back and forth over the range.

Twenty-seven Apaches, captured recently by Mexican troops, were taken out in a field at Chihuahua, Monday, and shot. Each met his death with calmness.

A jury in Chicago awarded damages of $[illegible] to William J. Connell for being ejected from a Pennsylvania train last year because he held a coupon ticket issued by the Wabash road.

The Kentucky board of agriculture estimates the wheat crop of that state at [illegible] bushels. Corn is in better condition than for years, and the acreage is 10 to 15 per cent. greater than last year.

George Brown, city marshal at Caldwell, Kan., was killed by a cowboy [illegible] a disturbance in a saloon. The murderer and his companion are being pursued by a posse.

The Diocesan house at Wilkesbarre, Pa., is now at a point directly under the Roman Catholic convent, and explosions are quite frequent. All the water which can be obtained is being poured down the lift.

The Jewish relief committee at New York has on its hands 1,000 exiles who will not attempt to help themselves. The superintendent of Castle Garden will no longer tolerate them, because of their filth, begginness, and indolence.

A party of 130 citizens of Akron, O., assembled during Thursday night and cut the reservoir of the hydraulic company, draining the water into the Little Cuyahoga, to cleanse the race-way of decaying matter.

In the house of commons, John Bright said the condition of Ireland was made vastly worse by subscriptions in America, and that those subjects of the queen who took part in the Chicago convention were traitors to the crown.

Jason Richardson, a rich and respectable farmer near Leavenworth, kissed his wife good-by, saying that she would probably not see him again. He drove to the city, mailed her a draft for a large sum of money, and mysteriously disappeared.

The Civil-Service Reform Association of New York offers to bet Judge A. Hubbell select for a test a case in which some New York officeholder has paid a political assessment, the trial to be held in the circuit court in that district.

L. C. Watkins, of Denver, whose daughter Zoe was recently found drowned at St. Louis, has been hunting for a gambler named Tully, with a view of ending his existence. The sport has disappeared, and the father will say nothing to interviewers.

The fifth great well in the Warren county oil-field was struck Wednesday, the yield being 1,000 barrels. One large well is on fire, causing a loss of $1,000 per day. The flames rise to a height of 50 feet.

Arabi Pasha informed an English correspondent that he will resist to the death any interference with the affairs of Egypt by her enemies, and can regard no settlement as satisfactory until the fleets are withdrawn. He stated that he had no thought of ruling without the khedive.

Sixteen fat bulls, worth $[illegible] per head, were shipped from Cincinnati to Jersey City without an attendant, and consequently received no care on the voyage. Three were found dead when the car was opened, and three more expired when released.

Vicente Bermerez, a Mexican, was recently sent to the Texas penitentiary for horse-stealing. The Mexican authorities having claimed that he was kidnapped from their territory, Secretary Frelinghuysen has ordered his release.

Agents of the steamship companies held a meeting in New York, Wednesday, and appointed a committee to visit Washington and urge President Arthur to veto the Deuster bill to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea.

The Cleveland rolling-mills are still compelled to guard their workmen. As the night train for employes started into the city it was stoned by a man and a woman. The former was captured by the police, and will be fined $50 or sent to jail for six months.

The federal grand jury at Austin, Tex., has indicted ex-Marshal Russell for the embezzlement of $9,558.

A correspondent at Alexandria telegraphs that if France and England interfere actively in Egypt, Arabi Pasha intends to blow up the Suez canal, cut the railway to Cairo, and oppose the landing of European troops. France has sent five more iron-clads to Alexandria, and will forward 1,300 marines.

A storm at 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon is said to have done great damage at Independence, Iowa, but, as the wires are prostrate, little can be learned. The Illinois Central windmill was blown down, the Cedar Rapids depot was wrecked, and many buildings were unroofed. Two men lost their lives.

Italian laborers engaged on the West Shore road near Albany struck for higher wages, and attempted to throw an engine and twenty flat-cars down an embankment. Cavana, the leader, who was a bandit at home, defies the authorities. A militia company from Catskill arrived at the scene of the disturbance Friday morning.

In the trial of the murderers of Martha Whitla, at Detroit, a barber named Frank De Rice gave full details of the part he played in aiding Hugo J. Peoples to take the corpse from a residence on Howard street to the river, where it was pushed through a hole in the ice, at midnight for which he received $20.

Captain Ross and his command of fifty Texas rangers followed the Apache trail into Mexico, where their arms were taken from them by General Reyes for an invasion of Mexican soil, and they were compelled to make their way home without weapons. They saw the dead body of Chief Loco.

About 1,400 Russian Jews are being sheltered around Castle Garden in New York, as the Aid society's houses are filled. The commissioners of emigration have given fifty acres of land near quarantine on which to erect accommodations. Five thousand immigrants arrived on Sunday.

The police commissioners of Jersey City have authorized the chief to use the entire force to prevent violence by striking longshoremen and freight-handlers. A large body of strikers frightened 130 Italians from the Erie docks, and warned them that they would be thrown into the river if they dared to continue work.

Seventy residents of Adrian, Mich., have been poisoned to a dangerous degree by eating cheese. The life of John L. Smith was only saved by vigorous treatment. The cheese was sold by several grocers, but is known to have been made at one factory last month. Minute parasites were revealed by the microscope.

One thousand striking freight-handlers in New York took possession of the yard of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Twelve miles of loaded cars are stalled on the Jersey meadows. The railroad companies are clearly responsible for perishable goods under the law regulating common carriers. Public sympathy is with the strikers, and the board of trade has passed resolutions urging an increase in their pay.

James B. Doyle, the bond counterfeiter, was arraigned before Judge Dyer in Chicago, and asked if he had any reason to urge against the passing of sentence. He replied that he was ignorant of the character of the bonds found in his possession, and hoped the court would heed the recommendation to mercy made by the jury. He was then sentenced to the Chester penitentiary for twelve years, and fined $1. He was subsequently allowed six days to settle his business affairs.

The Chicago wheat combination has been shipping to Europe its stock in store and the last of it will leave by Saturday. The shorts have made settlements on 7,000,000 bushels at prices ranging from $1.32 to $1.34. It is believed that Messrs. Mitchell, Armour, and Plankinton not only have the power to fix the price of No. 2 spring wheat for the summer, but the market value of corn and provisions. All the corn in store is being transferred directly to New England, where a place has been provided for every bushel. Much of the wheat now going to Europe has lain in store for from three to five years.

A northwest storm which struck Emmetsburg, Iowa, Saturday morning and lasted for twenty-five minutes, demolished a number of houses and injured several persons, among them being George Sanders and wife and Mrs. Boswell and child. At Hosper, a station on the St. Paul road, near Le Mars, the depot, a hotel, an elevator, and eighteen cars were demolished. Not to be left behind in the race for notoriety, Indianapolis sends to the front with a report of a cyclone occurring Sunday evening, causing damage to the amount of $50,000. No one was hurt. The steeple of St. Paul's cathedral was torn loose and sent down through the roof, and the wall of the Fifth Presbyterian church was blown in. Three lives were lost. At an early hour Sunday morning a terrific storm gathered in Butler county, Nebraska, and swept southwest through Saunders, Lancaster, Cass, Otoe, and Nemaha counties. In Saunders county the hail beat down the corn and scared the small grain. Two persons in Wahoo were blown down, and a herd of 125 ponies were swept clean in clover fields and through wire fences. Several lives were lost.

The petition for a reprieve for Guiteau was refused by the cabinet. Attorney general Brewster has instructed the District marshal and the warden of the jail to allow no one to see the prisoner except his spiritual adviser, his physician, and the jail officers. Guiteau ordered Rev. Mr. Hicks to shake his fist in the president's face and demand an unconditional pardon. John W. Guiteau telegraphed the president that he will present himself on Monday with new facts bearing on the question of insanity. The assassin notified his spiritual adviser that he desired his presence on the scaffold if the worst comes, and is now at work on his gallows speech. George Scoville, in a letter to President Arthur, speaking of the demand for vengeance made by the press and people, makes his final protest against the denial of a respite. Guiteau has lost five pounds in weight within the past ten days, and has to be tempted to eat. The guards notice a marked change for the worse, although he keeps up quite well in presence of visitors. Warden Crocker is of opinion that if his vanity is properly played upon he will go through his part next Friday without collapsing. Professor Godding, superintendent of the government insane asylum, thinks that Guiteau was born mentally deformed, and lost his reason in his nineteenth year.

FARMERS' CLUB.

We find there are many pleasant days scattered along our pathway in life, and many happy occasions long to be remembered. Thursday, the 22d of June the Farmers' Social Club met at Putnam's landing for their annual holiday and pic-nic. Early in the morning the clouds looked threatening, but soon patches of blue sky made their appearance and the teams were rapidly hitched to the carriages, and soon were en route for Sand Lake; some via Tecumseh, others through Newburg and one lone carriage via Clinton. By ten o'clock the members of the club and invited guests to the number of one hundred or more had assembled, and the grove and lake presented an animated scene. Mr. Putnam had the grounds in nice order and plenty of good boats. Fourteen boats were engaged and rapidly filled with robust men, blooming matrons, young men and maidens, and the little folks were not forgotton as many of them were seen among the crowd. Mr. A. D. Hall and Uncle John Rector could not resist the temptation to fish, so they procured bait and fishing tackle and rowed away for fishing grounds. They were well rewarded for each came back with a fine string of fish. This animated a number of others to try their luck. The fish seemed willing to be caught and the anglers (including some ladies) were all successful. A goodly number of ladies remained in the grove to prepare dinner, which was ready in good season, with an abundance of hot coffee. The crowd was called in and the way the provision disappeared indicated that all were blessed with good appetites, and that the cooking of the ladies was up to the usual good standard. After dinner the tables were soon cleared, dishes washed and then came the bathing. This is a scene that beggars description and your correspondent will not attempt it, only to say it is hard to tell which had the most fun, those in the water or those on shore watching the bathers.

Mrs. R. B. Gillispie and Mrs. F. C. Rector were applauded for their picturesque appearance and the "beautiful" hang of their garments. Next year we propose that L. F. Wheeler accompany us and take a picture of the bathers. The day began to pass away all too soon and the call was made for supper. The young men and maidens came in from rowing, and how shall we describe their beauty? We thought them handsome in the morning with their lily white complexion, but at night they were brilliant. Had they all assembled at once in Tecumseh after dark the citizens would have thought the village was illuminated with electric light. The supper surpassed the dinner, for the strawberry beds had been well gleaned and the berries were luscious. After supper all began preparations for returning home, declaring we had had a splendid time and hoping to come again. Among the invited guests were Dr. Ramsey and wife of Delta, Ohio. We thank H. E. Anderson for favors received. We would have been glad to welcome Texas, but when L. F. Wheeler takes those pictures we will send one down.

The first regular meeting this fall will be held at Mr. Jacob Eyerhart's.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Tamaxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

Relief Found at Last.

Carmel,

A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: I was troubled with derangement of the liver, which caused a general debility of my whole system. Had ague for two years, from which I found no relief until induced to try Tamaxine, which I am happy to say effected a cure. I am enjoying good health and have had no ague for one year. Yours, etc., J. Jeffries.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes' Opinion of Homœopathy.

"Homœopathy has no status among the biological sciences, and has nothing of any practical value, so far as I know, to offer the medical profession. It began by promising to prevent scarlet fever, which it miserably fails to do, and from that day to this it has been a romance of idle promises slipping through the fingers like quicksilver, evaporating without residue like either from the palm of the hand. If any of these promises had been fulfilled, if any single remedy brought forward by homœopathy had proven trustworthy and efficacious, it would have been thankfully accepted by the medical profession, which welcomes every method of help unless it shows itself with false pretences, and even then will appropriate any fraction of truth which underlies the deception or delusion.

So far as I can take account of the stock, the present assets of homœopathy consist of a pleasing and sonorous designation, a nomenclature of symptoms, with sets of little phials, containing globules, which are the prettiest and most fascinating of amulets, arranged to correspond with the nomenclature, a collection of "provings" which prove more about the prover than about the questions to be proved, and a doctrine which slips on or off like a kid glove, according to the company in which the practitioner finds himself."

Don't Do It.

Don't seek the temporary feeling of health and strength resulting from the use of beer or ale or other malt and alcoholic compounds. The after-effects make you feel worse than before. Permanent health is sure to be found in that best of all iron preparations, that friend to temperance and long life known as Brown's Iron Bitters.

The street music on the Fourth will be furnished by the Adrian Knights Templar Band which is acknowledged to be the best band in Southern Michigan.

Those Terrible Headaches.

I used "Favorite Remedy for those severe Sick-headaches I spoke about, and it has entirely cured me. You may use my name, if you choose, among those who so freely testify to the value of your medicine. I owe the restoration of my wonted good health to "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Sarah J. Woodruff, Newburg, N. Y. The above is one of the many letters of the kind received by Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N.Y.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

FRANKLIN.

The schools are all closed and as far as we know, only three of the teachers have been retained for the fall term.

J. R. Wheelan is spending a two weeks vacation at home. He is studying law in Judge Jennison's office, Detroit.

The ice cream festival at the M. E. parsonage on the 27th ult, was a grand success. 136 tickets were sold, and many more would have been sold had not the supply of ice cream failed.

Harry A. A. Hanford is making a flying visit home. He is keeping books for a wholesale and retail carriage manufacturing company of Detroit.

Mrs. A. W. Simmons is fast recovering her eye-sight under the professional care of Dr. Phixly, of Petersburg.

Mr. Putnam is building a summer residence for his family at his landing on Sand Lake.

John Conlin returned home last week after an extended trip through Iowa, Nebraska, and part of Dakota. He does not think it a desirable place to locate, but expects to invest in cattle and graze them there next season.

It is to be regretted that the Rev. C. G. Shepard did not see fit to accept of the call of the Congregational church as their pastor during the ensuing year. Mr. Shepard gained many friends during his short stay, but the church which had educated him had a claim on his services which he thought best to grant.

Your correspondent had the pleasure of attending the closing exercises of the school in dist. No. 5, Rollin, on the 28th of June. J. G. Tripp of Franklin, teacher. This is probably the best district school building in the county. It has all the modern fixtures and apparatus for ventilating, teaching and making school pleasant and attractive. It is newly built and is worth more than all the barns or so-called school-houses in Franklin. The school board have shown their good judgment in securing the services of Mr. T. for the fall, making his third term with them.

RIDGEWAY.

Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Bush, of Brooklyn, N. Y., arrived Saturday.

One of our patriotic citizens thought it would be brave to fire off a cannon with a match, during the celebration of the "glorious 4th" and has since occupied considerable time picking powder out of his face. But George's Amor Patria wouldn't induce him to try it again.

Uncle John Schram, though in very feeble health, has improved during the past week. He intends going to his daughter's in Tecumseh this week.

The friends and neighbors of Mr. J. Hall's people were invited in the evening of the Fourth to witness the fine display of fire works which had been forwarded to Erve and Eddie Bush by their father. A vote of thanks was unanimously given Mr. Hall for the entertainment.

Mrs. Eliza Sanford has only less than last week, the one only farm having been burned in the forenoon. It had not been occupied for the past year only as those using the farm had used it during the busy season. The loss is not great and yet the building was good for something.

EAST RIDGEWAY.

Several bloody contests remain unrecorded at the station which perhaps is just as well, but when a post office robbery occurs the HERALD ought to announce it to the public. It was on Sunday evening when the "city" seemed unusually quiet, on account of the repairing of inhabitants to a chapel in the suburbs, and not even the most far-seeing in the town had so much as thought of a raid on the post office. The assistant P. M., while wending his way from church, cursing himself because he hadn't courage enough to ask to see his lady love home, all at once spied, gleaming through the window in that part of his store where the P. O. is located, a shaded lamp light which instantly impressed him of the mammoth robbery that was being perpetrated.

"Oh! my soul, what shall I do?" he exclaimed, and just at that time he saw one of the robbers pass between the light and the window. This was conclusive evidence, the town must be aroused, and, forgetting his sweet heart, his best boots and "tother" clothes he leaped the fence and skipped on tip-toe through the grass cross lots to give the alarm. In a moment's time Major John Tank, Brigadier Exelby, Captain Jack, (the Wabash undertaker), and the assistant P. M. were in the act of surrounding the building. The Brigadier, armed with a club, proposed to go in at once and make the capture, but didn't. The Major was ready to agree to anything, but kept his eye on the outhouse. Captain Jack said "Give me that pistol and I'll route 'em." but he became faint when he found it was a fire-cracker pistol which the assistant P. M. had intended to give his sweetheart to celebrate the Fourth. The assistant P. M., himself, was almost past recognition, his hair having pushed his hat off, and his eyes resembling a locomotive head-light. He seemed to think the stiller he kept the better, but had forethought enough to locate himself in a favorable place to start into a run.

A moment later, and with the Brigadier for lead the quartette trembingly and cautiously reached the door.—All was still as death within. The quartette inside the door, and the same stillness, except the thumping of the Major's heart against his ribs. Another advance, followed by a halt by the office door. A change comes over the assistant P. M., his hair smoothed down, he thinks—and remembers that he left the light burning Saturday night, and had not noticed it through the day. The quartette dispersed, agreeing to keep mum, but the joke was too good to keep.

EAST TECUMSEH.

R. R. Hall has tried a new method of raising boiled corn; ask him how he likes it.

The Rev. Mr. Chase, of Hillsdale college preaches at the Culbertson school house every alternate Saturday evening.

MACON.

The Rev. Mr. Kershow occupied the pulpit of the Reformed church last week Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. A. De Spelder, who was attending commencement week at Hope college.

School closed Friday afternoon, June 23, with appropriate exercises. The pupils of the higher department did much credit to themselves and their instructor, Mr. Triplet, in the performance of the duties assigned them. Just before dismissal Mr. Triplet was presented by his scholars with a copy of Macauley's history of England, handsomely bound, in five volumes. Also a book of poems. The scholars of the primary department, after distinguishing themselves in recitations and declamations, repaired to the grove with their teacher, Miss Elva Richart, where a picnic supper was spread, and the little folks held high festival until sundown. Mr. Triplet returns this week to his home at North Adams.

The people of this place turned out and drew gravel on the road between the residences of Lester Coller and Michael Hendershot. This road during the muddy season of the year, is a veritable Slough of Despond to the weary pilgrim. One Experience from Many.

I had been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Gentlemen—Your Hop Bitters have been of great value to me. I was laid up with typhoid fever for over two months and could get no relief until I tried your Hop Bitters. To those suffering from debility or any one in feeble health, I cordially recommend them. F. C. Stoetzel, 683 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

The Meaning of an Opal.

"See with what vivid and what varied flame
I love you Agie," said my love to me,
Always so tenderly he breathes my name,
The little name seems a caress to be.

Clasped in an endless circlet of fair gold,
An opal—less a jewel than a fire—
Burned with bright hues whose symbols sweetly told
Of deathless love, of truth and pure desire.

We studied his keen opal, he and I,
Cheek warm on cheek, hands safe in shelter-ing hands;
Here burned the blue of fair fidelity,
There shot the gold of wisdom and command.

Here vivid violet, in which red and blue
Blent cunningly to tell the truth of love;
And then all suddenly love's crimson hue
Triumphantly all colors spread above.

Next spring to light the emerald's fairy sheen,
Whereat I looked to him; he, whisperingly:
"Of old, Hope's sacred symbol was this green;
Pronounce it means, love's tender jealousy."

Then glowed an orange light, where red and gold
Met in an oriflamme; and softly he Spoke yet again: "This union, sweet, doth hold Sign of eternal wedlock that shall be.

"Fire-like, this trembling and most vivid light
Speaks deepest passion—hear you me, my life?
Yet purely above flame reigns virgin white,
So dares this opal speak of you, my wife."

NARROWLY ESCAPED.

"Yes, I am not generally mistaken, and from all that I have seen I don't think I am this time. Take my word for it, their engagement will very soon be announced."

Mrs. Carton spoke composedly, nodding her head as she did so. Her hostess looked at her in surprise, and her hostess's daughter, Amy Featherstone, lost from her face all semblance of attention to the conversation of young Mr. Carton.

"You think so, Mrs. Carton?" interrogatively, from Mrs. Featherstone.

"I certainly do. Laura Gordon is a beauty, and very captivating; Dr. Ferrers is a rising man. The match would please her family. Then there is the power of propinquity, you know," affirmed Mrs. Carton, as she rose. "Come, Bruce, if you are done saying pretty things, we will go."

Bruce Carton's complimentary remarks were certainly at an end, it was so evident that the girl was lost in her own thoughts. He rose, casting a half reproachful last glance at the fair, downcast countenance, and in a moment Mrs. Featherstone's callers, mother and son, had taken their departure.

"I do not believe it, dear," said Mrs. Featherstone.

With a throb of gratitude toward her mother, Amy's heart yet ached, as though a sword had been thrust through it. She stood at the window a moment, but she turned away at last, and went up to her own room.

She flung herself face downwards across the bed, and lay shivering and thinking bitterly enough in the cold chamber. Though her mother had the utmost confidence of this pure, young [illegible] wanted to be alone awhile with her meditations.

All the long, pleasant Autumn, Charles Ferrers had frequented Mossmere, as the picturesque old house was called; and for weeks Amy had enjoyed the sunshine of his society, sweet and unconscious as a flower.

But one day her father had said, with a half-laugh:

"Child, do you imagine your handsome young doctor comes to see me or your mother? No; he comes to see you."

Amy's blue eyes grew wide with surprise.

"Mother!" she said, appealingly, the rosy color mounting to her temples.

"Certainly, my dear; you are sixteen years old, good and pretty. Why not?" responded Mrs. Featherstone, quietly.

The color faded slowly from the soft cheeks. Amy grew thoughtful; from that moment she was no longer a child.

And all that Winter the visits of Dr. Ferrers at Mossmere continued. It was a delightful home, and Amy, so widely different from the girls of the period whom he was constantly in the habit of meeting, had a decided charm for him. She was his secret ideal of what a girl ought to be; and yet there was Laura Gordon and the influence of Elmcroft, the most magnificent estate in the county.

It was often frequented—yes, thronged—by the wealthiest, the gayest, the most fashionable people. He saw them constantly, daily lived in this artificial atmosphere. He felt sometimes that only the grave responsibility of his calling and the influence of the sweet girl at Mossmere kept him from becoming as light a butterfly as the rest.

And part of the luxury of Elmcroft was Laura Gordon. No pictured creation was ever so bewilderingly fair—a houri, with nothing to employ her idle white fingers but the counting of the rose-tinted pearls that formed her favorite necklace.

And for Doctor Ferrers all her smiles were honestly sweet. His voice, manners, and beautiful physique pleased her fancy, and she knew that he was considered talented.

As Mrs. Carton had said, "The match would be agreeable to the family." And vaguely he felt it.

Mrs. Featherstone saw, with concern, that Amy loved, was drooping, and impulsively combatted the idea that Mr. Ferrers loved another. She had studied the young man—believed that he appreciated her daughter; and if this were true, how could he marry Laura Gordon, with her selfishness, beautiful as she was?

"Propinquity!" she murmured. "That is an argument against it. He must, thrown so much in her society, learn her selfishness, her insincerity, her heartlessness."

But for Amy there was no such hopeful consolation. She had great self-respect, but little self-esteem, and with deep appreciation of beauty, caused by an artistic temperament, her cause, so modest in its claims, seemed quite lost.

"Of course he will forget me for her!" she mused.

Mrs. Carton was own aunt to Dr. Ferrers. Her house was a fine one, on the outskirts of Highbridge, and just at this time she gave a large, general party, inviting the Gordons, her nephew, the Featherstones, and many others.

"I do not care to go, mother," said Amy, dejectedly.

Poor child! The world seemed so very hollow, and she was so young, and her powers of endurance undeveloped. But she yielded to her mother's wishes, and when the pale brown silken hair, with its tinge of gold, was looped in great braids, and fastened from the white temples and roseate cheeks by sprays of lace-like green, that trailed from the graceful coiffeur to the hem of the rustling, moonlit, silken robe, no fairy was ever statelier or lovelier. Amy saw her beauty with a start of surprise.

"Mother, am I really so pretty?" she asked, looking with innocent eyes of frank delight into her mother's pleased and tender face.

"My darling, you are beautiful and good as you are fair."

And so, with her secret grief half consoled by these words of love, Amy went to the party.

There were many strangers present, and among them a little, wrinkled, old lady, with a plain cap and black alpaca dress, looking strangely out of place in her corner, though evidently much entertained by the novel sight of the gay company. Her dress was extremely neat, and suited to her years, if not to the occasion.

And Amy and her mother, after a single glance and mutual thought to this effect, were passing by, when their attention was attracted by a half-subdued sound, very like a schoolgirl giggle, and turning, beheld a merry group surrounding Miss Gordon, whose eyes were directed toward the corner where sat the little old lady in alpaca, and by the smiles curling the lips of those around her, the remarks falling from her ruby lips were evidently very amusing.

The surging crowd of promenaders pressed Amy and her mother a little closer to this group.

"Oh, I know!" Amy heard Laura say; "it's one of the extinct species Professor Dabney was telling us of last Winter. How interesting! and how very kind of Mrs. Carton to provide for the entertainment of her serious-minded friends!"

The air of mock gravity and the graceful contortion were indescribable, and half-a-dozen lace handkerchiefs went up to rosy lips that must not laugh too loudly.

I will do this group the justice to say that they were the very youngest of Mrs. Carton's guests, and had recently been Laura's school friends. It was but a year and a half since the young lady had left the academy.

But Amy's cheek burned. She met Laura's beautiful eyes indignantly, and, as her mother, not overhearing the objectionable remarks, serenely joined a group of matrons, she slipped her hand from her arm and stepped back into the old lady's corner.

"May I sit here a moment?" she asked, with a sweet, apologetic smile. "I am a little tired."

"Yes, dear; certainly, certainly," replied the old lady, gathering her alpaca skirts to make room for Amy's fair drapery on the little sofa; and then she looked, with evident pleasure, more [illegible] the sweet countenance.

"You don't look tired, [illegible] last. "You look as fresh as a May morning. It is very nice to be young, though the old have their pleasures. Of course, nobody notices an old lady like me in this corner, but I am really enjoying myself. I live so quietly in my house in the country that the company, the dancing, and the music are very entertaining to me. Mrs. Carton is my sister. I arrived unexpectedly to-night, intending to give her and my son a surprise. I was not prepared for attending a party, but I—I thought I would slip in quietly for a little while, and not make any trouble. I presume no one has seen me but you, my dear."

There was something very sweet in this simple and unconscious old lady's manner. Amy replied with a smile, and continued the conversation, hoping to so divert her companion that she might not discover Laura's eye-glass, and the merry faces of her friends. Suddenly, to her surprise, she saw Dr. Ferrers, his flashing eyes fixed sternly upon the merry-making group. Suddenly advancing upon the haughty Laura:

"Will you allow me?" he said; and taking her hand upon his arm, led her before the little, old stranger.

"Miss Gordon, allow me to present you to my mother," he said; and then, not giving the gentle old lady time to rise, he swept the young lady to a seat and took a ceremonious leave of her.

In a moment he had come back to the sofa in the corner, and his brow cleared.

"So you and Miss Featherstone are getting acquainted, mother?" he said, gladly. "I hope," he added, bending closer, "that you will come to love each other as much as I love you both."

Out of the long evening at Mrs. Carton's party those were the only words that Amy distinctly remembered; but they rung, sweetest music, in her ears all night.

And when morning came, Doctor Ferrers, driving out, with his dear, little, old mother, in the presence of her mother, who also "loved them both," offered to Amy his heart, hand, and fortune, and, apparently not without fear and trembling, awaited his answer.

It was a momentous occasion. I can only say that it ended happily for all parties.

"Mrs. Carton thought you would marry Laura Gordon, Charles," said Mrs. Featherstone, after the wedding.

Doctor Ferrers looked thoughtful. He did not just then confess that he had narrowly escaped making such a mistake.

Mrs. Longfellow.

I never saw Mrs. Longfellow, says a correspondent of the Providence Press, without a strong impression of her likeness to the pictured "Evangeline." Her low, broad brow, overshadowed by the masses of dark hair which seemed to frame the whole face, was repeated in picture, and there were the same large eyes, the deep eyes that did not "twinkle," of which the poet wrote in "Hyperion."

One could not look at Mr. Longfellow about this time without a sense of his happiness, so all-pervasive did it seem. I did not see him for two years after his wife died, and he had changed so much in that period that I did not recognize him at first sight. It was not a change that suggested physical decay. A stranger who saw him then for the first time would have pronounced him a fine specimen of vigorous manhood. But the look of content, satisfaction, or happiness—call it what you will—that once made his face radiant was gone—and it never returned.

Mrs. Longfellow was a tall and stately brunette, who added to great personal beauty rare powers of intellect and high culture. Her manner toward strangers whom she met on terms of equality was almost regal; while to those whom she employed, or who were dependent upon her, she was singularly considerate. I remember the mixture of awe and admiration with which our beautiful dressmaker, a most excellent woman, told me that Mrs. Longfellow, on coming to be measured, had asked her to be a little more careful with this than she had been with the last dress, made three months before, which had been several inches longer on one than it was on the other side. It was an elegant dress, yet there had been no hasty message sent back; allowance had been made for the inexperience of some new worker who had made the blunder. There was no appearance of vexation in her manner. The fault was simply spoken of in a kindly way that conveyed her full confidence that, if it were made known to her, the seamstress would wish to avoid a similar mistake as much as her employer would wish to have her do so. I comment on this circumstance because it illustrates so perfectly her magnanimous feeling, the outgrowth always of a grand nature, toward those who were, in a sense, in her power.

Her style of brunette beauty was that which admitted of her wearing the most delicate shades of any color, such as sky blue, pale rose, and the like, and her taste was exquisite. Her dignity was not the result of training and constant intercourse with well-bred people; it was a dignity of character that manifested itself in many directions, and even in matters of the toilet gave her a delicate sense of the fitness of things.

At that notable entertainment given in Boston, the ball in honor of the prince of Wales, her dress was a pale lavender silk brightened by cherry-colored trimmings, and finished with rare old lace. But no demand of demoralized custom, under the name of "full dress," could induce her to display the charms of her lovely person to the gaze [illegible] though it was, and claiming as it did to be composed of the elite of that region. The open corsage of the dress was filled to the throat with an artistic arrangement, of her own designing, of soft, fleecy lace, which completed a womanly toilet.

How Weeds Are Introduced.

Attention is called by the American Agriculturist to the fact that numerous weeds are introduced into parts of the country where they were unknown through the practice of making use of them for ornamental purposes in cities and towns. It says:

Sometime ago we mentioned the fact that the flowers of the ox-eye daisy were in such demand by the city florists that several persons were engaged in forcing them, in order to get them into bloom in early spring, at which time they were sold at a price sufficiently high to pay for the labor expended. When the plants came into flower in the fields they were offered at every street corner, and were not much in demand. Later, we have seen in the florists' windows clusters of the flowers of a still worse weed, the toad-flax (Linaria vulgaris), also called "butter and eggs," and in some localities "ramsted weed." This is now justly regarded as one of the worst weeds of our farms, yet the writer can recollect when it was a favorite garden plant. Clusters of this were generally offered by the Broadway florists. Another weed appeared later in the windows, and noticeable from the fact that it is a native. The two plants mentioned above are introduced from abroad, as are the great majority of the weeds of our fields and gardens, but in Rudbeckia hirta, the "thorn, cone-flower," we have an undeniable native. This is supposed to have been brought from the west in baled hay; in all events it is now thoroughly disbuted throughout the meadows and tures of the eastern states. It has come to stay, and makes itself more thoroughly at home from year to year. Like ox-eye daisy, it belongs to the great flower family. It is much larger coarser than that. Its flowers are larger, with yellow rays, and a central portion, or disk, of so dark a purple that it is almost black. Its stem and foliage are very coarse and rough hairs. To see this valuable weed, the increase of which is watched with dismay, often in the and to see large clustered bouquets of ladies who had [illegible] using produced a sensation far [illegible] effect. FOR YOUNG FOLK'S.

Two Neds.

"Oh dear!" cried Neddy, starting back. "What is that thing, gram'pa?"

They were out walking over the farm, Grandpa Howe and Neddy; and they had stopped to rest in the shade of a big maple, a little way from the bank of the creek.

Something else had stopped in the shade of the maple, too. If it had kept quite still, even Neddy, with his bright eyes, might have called it a funny-looking stone, and thought no more about it. But it didn't keep still, it stretched out a head and put down four feet, and began crawling away.

"What is it?" cried Neddy, again.

"He carries his house right on his back, gram'pa."

"Yes," said grandpa. "It's a mud-turtle, Neddy." Then he put on his glasses. "Hollo!" said he.

"What?" asked Neddy.

"Can you read that printing on his shell, Neddy?"

"Yes, sir," answered Neddy, promptly; and he read, "Ned Howe, May 24, 1832." Why-ee, that's you, gram'pa!"

"Yes," said grandpa, "I cut that when I was fourteen years old—fifty years ago this very day, Neddy—fifty years ago!" And grandpa held his glasses in his hand and gazed at the letters in a musing way. "Well, well, I wouldn't have believed it!"

"Don't you s'pose it hurts him?" asked Neddy, looking at the letters, too. "I mean to cut 'em?"

"No," answered grandpa; "not if you're careful."

"Then—then, can't you cut my name on, too, gram'pa, and say it's to-day? O gram'pa can't you?"

"Yes," answered grandpa; "I think I can."

So Neddy held the turtle still, very gently, and watched while grandpa carved a second name under the first, in its shell. It took a long time, but it looked very nice when it was done.

"Neddy Howe, May 24, 1882."

What fun it was!

"There's room for another," said Neddy, taking grandpa's hand again when they had watched the turtle crawl over the bank into the creek.

"Wouldn't it be funny if some time I'd put my little grandson's name on there? Then there'd be three Ned Howes. Do you s'pose I will, gram'pa?"

"That's too far ahead," said grandpa, with a funny smile; and home the two Neds went, across the pleasant fields, together.

Fido's Help.

Fido and tabby were very good friends. They lived in the same house and had their meals together.

They were little animals, and could not do great things; but they had plenty of loving, helpful ways.

When you are partaking of soup at a public dinner drink it out of the plate. Using a spoon is proper, of course, but awful slow work. To Keep the Blood Pure is the principal end of my inventions and discoveries in medicine. To this object probably no one has contributed more signally than Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., in the production of a medicine which has become famous under the title of the "Favorite Remedy," it removes all impurities of the Blood, regulates the disordered Liver and Kidneys, cures Constipation, Dyspepsia, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. Sold by your druggist. $1.00 a bottle.

The Greatest Medicine of the Age.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a powerful remedy, which can be taken internally as well as externally by the tenderest infant. It cures almost instantly, is pleasant, acting directly upon the nervous system, causing a sudden buoyancy of the mind. In short, the wonderful effects of this wonderful remedy cannot be explained in written language. A single dose inhaled and taken according to directions will convince any one that it is all that is claimed for it. Warranted to cure the following diseases: Rheumatism or Kidney disease in any form, headache, toothache, earache, neuralgia, sprains, bruises, flesh wounds, bunions, burns, spinal affections, colic, cramps, pains, cholera morbus, flux, diarrhœa, colds, bronchial affections, catarrh, and all aches and pains, external or internal. Full directions with each bottle. For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

Good News.

No more Chill and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Bilious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1.00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

[illegible] John Russell, speaking once of the famine of 1849, said: "More than 500 families were in that year turned out of their wretched dwellings without food and without a refuge. We have made Ireland—I speak it deliberately—have made it the most degraded and miserable country in the world. All the world is crying shame upon us, but we are equally callous to our ignominy and to the results of our misgovernment."

Going to His Grave.

There he goes again direct to a saloon and pours down another heavy draught of strong drink, not so much because his appetite demands it, but for the artifical buoyancy it produces the after effect of which leaves him more miserable than before; it is this dreadful practice that is daily sending thousands to their graves. A remedy for all this is found in the true friend of temperance,—the best and purest of all medicines,—Electric Bitters. Sold by all Druggists at 50 cents.

The subject of kleptomania is again receiving [illegible] many years ago a gentleman farmer of New Jersey entered a store and said to the proprietor, "I wish that my wife should do all her shopping for dry goods in one place. She will steal everything that she fancies. If you will please watch her, charge the goods and let me have the bill once a week I will pay it, and, instead of disgracing us by arrest, you will win the thanks of a heart-broken man. Half the time she doesn't know where she got the goods, and otherwise she is sane and lovely."

Straw has long been used for the manufacture of paper, and it is now made into to lumber of any desired length and width. It holds nails as well as wood, and is susceptible of a higher finish and polish. Like papier mache, it is waterproof, and can, therefore, be used for external as well as internal purposes. Samples resemble hardwood, nearly as dark as oak, but more dense in texture, and with a specific gravity one-fifth more than that of black walnut. It is cheaper than wood, and will in the future largely take its place in building.

Free to Everyone.

A 10c sample of Hill's Peerless Cough Syrup. We also sell the large bottles on an absolute guarantee. If not satisfied after using, return the empty bottle and we will refund your money. We also sell the Peerless Worm Specific on the same terms. No cure, no pay. Cobbs' Little Podophyllin Pills will cure headache, billiousness and constipation. No pay. One pill a dose.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

Important to Travelers.

Special Inducements are offered you by the BURLINGTON ROUTE. It will pay you to read their advertisement to be found elsewhere in this issue.

For all inflammation of the bronchial tubes or bad colds, Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a splendid remedy. A few drops should be taken clear on sugar every three or four hours, and bathe the throat and chest two or three times a day. It speedily allays the irritations, ticklings and itching, and creates a healthy action, and a complete cure is readily effected.

STONES IN THE KIDNEYS

And Bladder Expelled—Long Sufferer of one of Troy's Best People—A Lucky Man.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr. Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April [illegible]

Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

DEAR SIR:—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, as by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For some year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 1½ of an inch long and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly,

James Andrews,

No. 10 Marshall St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in this fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Get it of your druggist, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

The owners of the salt well at LeRoy, N. Y., have concluded that the quality of the brine is sufficiently strong to insure the purchase of eight acres of land surrounding the well, and they contemplate erecting a suitable building for the manufacture of the article.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

An Astonished Countryman.

Conjurers, and even men skilled in the graver dexterities of science, commonly retain humor enough to amuse themselves at the expense of the ignorant, when the temptation is strong. The Hartford Times says:

Professor E. C. Bassett, of this city, can tell many interesting incidents connected with his experience as a psychologist and balloonist, but he was never taken for "old cloven-hoof" but once.—This was on Talcott Mountain, where he was making a cup of "French" coffee by the road. This was done by pouring a little brandy into a cup of cold coffee, and then setting fire to it.

While he was employed, a farmer came jogging by in his wagon, and stopped to see what Bassett was up to. The latter invited the old man to take some coffee. The brandy was still blazing, but the more brilliant blaze of the noonday sun completely obscured the flame. The countryman alighted and asked for a match, with which to light his pipe.

"I don't use matches," was Bassett's answer. "See!"

And Bassett held a piece of paper over the cup of coffee and it ignited instantly. He turned to hand the light to the stranger, and saw him clambering into his wagon.

"Get up!" shouted the man to his horse. "I never have dined with the devil, and I don't propose to begin now." And he drove furiously away.

A Novel Beauty.

At the Garfield tea-party, held recently in the rotunda of the capitol, there was one beautiful stranger who excited everyone's interest. She was tall, exquisitely slender and graceful, with fine, delicate features, a creamy complexion, and eyes and hair like midnight. Women of that particularly rare beauty were only to be met in Spanish-American countries, and approached to barely by the lovely creoles of New Orleans. The unknown lady wore just the dress an artist would have put her in: a deep, gold-colored satin, with sleeves and draperies of black thread lace, and a large corsage bouquet of red roses, and her hair was caught back in a gracefully loose knot. She stopped before the Kansas table and spoke to Mrs. Ream. Immediately an enthusiastic young man rushed to ask who the Mexican beauty was. "Do you know her?" he said, and the matron gave him the satisfactory reply that she did. She was her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Ream, of Indian Territory. Mrs. Ream was a princess of the Cherokee nation, with a soft, musical name of that dialect before she conventionalized it by marriage, and she is still one of the most beautiful women to be seen.

Modern Delilah.

A resident of Syracuse has two daughters who are very lively young women, and wide awake to all that is passing in the world. One of the daughters is a school-teacher, and, as is proverbial among that class of people, is fond of seeing things "about right." A few days ago she discovered that the gray locks of her father required the good offices of the hair-cutter. Like a dutiful daughter, she called his attention to the fact, but he was not so particular as to his personal appearance as she, and so neglected to visit the barber. For several days she continued to urge [illegible] ties produced no effect. But she was not to be foiled. Those locks must be shorn. A few days ago the old gentleman lay down on the sofa to take an after-dinner nap, his Samsonian locks flowing over the pillow. Delilah and her scissors were ready, and she proceeded in the most artistic manner to decorate his hair with fangs, scallops, water-waves, and all the modern arrangements of the scalp. When the old gentleman awoke some remarks were offered, and then he took his hat and went to the barber's.

English Horse-Cars.

The managers of the sundry lines of horse-cars will not permit even a small dog to ride, but in England they are so accomodating that a pig is not an objectionable passenger.

A Sheffield street-car well filled with passengers was stopped to admit a portly dame, who calmly entered bearing in her arms a lively young pig, which forthwith began to squeal vociferously.

This set a couple of roosters in the other end of the car to crowing after the manner of their kind, and the joint cry of pig and roosters provoked a number of babies into screaming.

Then the other passengers began protesting, and in the midst of the tumult the pig bit its mistress's finger to the bone, at which she uttered a yell which might have waked the "Seven sleepers." Meantime the conductor was shouting at the top of his voice that he couldn't allow such "goings on."

The Letter That Startled a Husband.

A Broad street merchant's wife recently gave him the following letter, with instructions that it should not be opened until he got to his place of business: "I am forced to tell you something that I know will trouble you, but it is my duty to do so. I am determined you shall know it, let the result be what it may. I have known for a week that this trial was coming, but kept it to myself until to-day, when it has reached a crisis, and I cannot keep it any longer. You must not censure me too harshly, for you must reap the benefits as well as myself. I do hope it won't crush you. The flour is all out. Please send me some this afternoon. I thought that by this method you would not forget it." The husband telephoned forthwith for a barrel of the best flour in the market to be sent to his home instanter.—Nashville (Tenn.) American.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!
A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found an ointment which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

COMMENCEMENT DAY.

THE EXERCISES OF THE GRADUATING CLASS AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

Ten Young Ladies Receive their Diplomas —A Fine Program Presented to a Crowded House.

The commencement exercises of the graduating class were held at the opera house on Thursday evening of last week. Promptly at eight o'clock Prof. Fairfield announced the first exercise and the program was presented in a most creditable manner and in the following order:

Prayer—Rev. Henry Shepard.
Music—Trio, "Marche Triumphale," Misses Doty, Shepard, Hause.
Essay—Stepping Stones, Helen F. Church.
Essay—Mummies, May DeWolf.
Essay—My Knight of the 19th Century, Allie J. Satterthwaite.
Music—Solo, Satellite, Elida D. James.
Essay—Our Mutual Friend, Lizzie F. Hayden.
Essay—Not so Bad as We Seem, Gertie D. Hause.
Essay—Wait a Minute, Elida D. James.
Music—Solo, "Old Black Joe," Florence E. Shepard.
Essay—Blackberries are Green when Red, Jennie Nyland.
Essay—Samantha Allen's Sister on White-Wash, Florence E. Shepard.
Essay—Mis-pah, Leila G. Doty.
Music—Class Song.
Conferring Diplomas.
Benediction—Rev. Josiah Phelps.

The Diplomas were presented by Lucius Lilley in a few well chosen remarks. Miss Elva Richart, who had been out of school teaching, returned and passed her examination at the eleventh hour, after the program had been arranged. She received a diploma therefore as well as the nine young

HELEN F. CHURCH.

As the successive projecting stones from a stream afford a footing from one of its shores to the other, so the trifling events of every-day life serve as a series of stepping-stones from ignorance to wisdom. If we glance backward over our lives, we find that our experience of even a few years ago was not nearly as great as it is to-day. One day after another bring thoughts and ideas which had never before been presented to our mind, and it is by these little additions that knowledge is gained, that thought is brought into action.

Each year forms a stepping stone by which youth, maturity and old age are reached. We cannot shut our eyes and take a leap that will carry us over space devoid of thought, action and deed. We can never say we do not know of a past year, what it was, or what experience it brought us. That year can never be whole a blank, however insignificant it may then have seemed. In our record of years, it would be as a missing particular chapter, in an important book. We may retrace a step across the brook, but a year can never be lived over again. Its experience stands as a warning to us, and always serves as a teacher to guide our steps in the vague and mysterious future. A falling leaf may be the first of many severed from the tree that soon becomes bare and unlovely. These stones in a brook acted upon by wind and wave, are unlike each other because of a rougher or gentler motion of these forces. The joys, the temptations and the trials of different years are also unlike, because of the different circumstances in which we are placed, and the variation of our strength in resisting temptation. Temptation resisted gives rise to increased power, while the yielding to evil induces weakens the will and enfeebles the power of resistance. One stone after another, one thought originates or awakens a train of thoughts, one year forms the link between two years. One word in any language is insufficient to promote knowledge, but without that word as a beginning, there would be no vocabulary of words by which a nation secures command of that means of communication through which it influences the world for good or evil.

Great results can never be secured in any undertaking without trials and discouragements and an experience of mingled joys and sorrows; but this state of things generally awakens our dormant faculties, and they, when fully aroused to energy, may combine with our physical strength to accomplish important results. One wave of the ocean produces others, one drop of water may revive the tiniest flower, countless numbers of these drops may sweep the decks of ships, or on the other hand, cause a suffering people to turn with gratitude in their hearts to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Shakespeare, Milton, or any other great poet who has left an undying fame, never obtained their glory by the work of a day, nor a month, nor a year, but by patient labor, adding one train of thought to another and weaving them together in a manner peculiar to himself, have they gained the respect and admiration of the world. Thus we see how little events and little influences form our life and character. Depth of thought cannot be possible without experience. It must be developed. How incompetent would we be in dealing with important affairs if we had not had our little every-day experiences, and learned our lessons and gained our strength little by little. We are so constituted that we have neither the physical nor mental ability without having first developed both physical and mental powers. As a means of development, we must have a teacher, and what teacher is better than Experience? Without it we would be nothing. Perfect character is not the result of a few great events, but of the constant occurrence of trifles, which, though seemingly unimportant, mark the way of life. Trifles are the stepping-stones by which we progress and gain knowledge and judgment which may come into use in the decision of more weighty matters. Life is not characterized by the alternation of vast heights and abrupt depths. It is the succession of simple deeds that marks the general course of our life's journey while the greater events make the otherwise monotonous way feel the enthusiasm of variety. Though the stepping stone may be small and rough yet cling to it, for it may precede those smoother and more easily trodden. Life is a series of stepping stones to everyone. Some lead to wickedness and vice. Those that lead to these ends are large at first, but grow smaller and smaller, till he who has been pursuing this way is no longer able to keep his footing, but is precipitated into the darkest depths of misery and despair. On the other hand, some stepping-stones lead to truth and virtue. These are small and hard to tread at first, but they gradually increase in size and smoothness, till he no longer sees the waves of trials near him, but in the far distance he has gained a secure footing, which he can easily retain, and from which he may lend a helping hand to fellow comrades.

Mummies.

MAY DEWOLFE.

"To make past ages seem real to us, it is necessary, not only to resort to dry facts, but to allow the imagination to have free play, for

"All books feed not from the heart,
Nor all bearings from the ear:
We can hearken and copy make a flash of eye, he excitedly wishes that he could travel forever.

Since then three thousand years have passed, and the busy nineteenth century presents itself to our minds. Standing in the studio of an aesthetic young lady is the painting of a large sunflower. As she dips her brush into the mummy paint she tells her friend that it was made from the celebrated mummy of Iris, daughter of the king Rameses, and as she paints the soulfull maiden sings, "Out of her dust these brightest flowers bloom."

Type of the sweet maid of long ago. And we wonder if her soul is not at rest, since according to the ancient Egyptian belief, the soul depended, even after death, in some way upon the body for its contented state, this life being only an episode in an eternal existence, and death the real life, only evil spirits being spoken of as dead. But although her soul has passed into the great unknown, her body is still performing a mission by uplifting us, through art, in the creation of the beautiful.

But what has become of her brother Alexis? If you visit a certain traveling museum you will find one of the chief attractions to be an Egyptian mummy. Large crowds view it daily and many are the remarks passed on it. Some think that it has a rather tired expression. Others wonder if it really is in some way conscious of what is going on around it as the Egyptians believed. On the mummy is the inscription, Alexis, son of Rameses. His rock-hewn tomb has been penetrated and robbed, and his poor tired body taken out. His rash wish is being fulfilled, for he is still traveling.

There has been very little change in him since the time he was embalmed. While great nations have fallen, and from their ruins new ones have sprung up, changing the whole course of human affairs, he has remained the same.

From this unchangableness of the mummy its name has been applied to all stationary institutions. Thus, Egypt, his own country, after reaching a certain degree of civilization, became herself a mummy, and though today we do not embalm our dead, yet we have certain kinds of mummies. The business man often furnishes us with an example, especially in America. Wrapped in broadcloth, in a little box-office twelve by six he passes his time, and gradually dries up.

Then we have the religious mummy who writes his name on the church book, buys a pew, then embalms himself and remains mum forever after.

A still more noticable class are the intellectual mummies. They obtain a certain amount of knowledge and make no further progress either on account of indolence, or because in their opinion there is no need of going further, since they have learned all there is to be known. They become unable to accept an advanced idea, for they have reached a perfect state of embalment.

Perhaps this is the worst class of mummies, and it would seem better to be called by any other name than this, so

"You may say we're not smart,
That we have not a heart,
You may call us lazy,
Or perhaps say we are crazy,
And what is still worse call us dummies,
But what ever you say don't call us mummies.

Miz-pah.

LEILA G. DOTY.

More than 3000 years ago, in the days of the ancient, in the land of the holy, in the Mt. of Gilead, a final separation was about to take place. For a score of years had Jacob served Laban, his twice father-in-law, and was repeatedly and basely deceived by him. And even now, after having traveled a 7-days' journey, is overtaken by him and accused of theft. Although the accusation is half unjust, and half deserved; yet after diligent search he is proved seemingly innocent. He is also upbraided in that he has departed secretly, and is thus questioned:—"Wherefore, didst thou flee away unawares and carry away my daughters as captives taken with the sword, and didst not tell me, that I might have sent thee away with mirth and with song, with tabret and with harp? and hast not suffered me to kiss my sons and my daughters? Surely, in this, thou hast done foolishly."

But Jacob feeling justified as to his past conduct, and deeming himself unjustly accused, allowed the human in his nature to prevail, and thus assailed Laban: "These twenty years have I been with thee, fourteen years have I served thee for thy two daughters, and six years for thy flocks. That which was torn of beasts I brought not unto thee again, I myself bear the loss of it, of my hand didst thou require it, whether stolen by day or stolen by night. Thus was I, in the day the droughts consumed me, and the frosts by night; thus have I been twenty years in thy house, and thou hast reduced my wages ten times. Except the God of my fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac had been with me thou hadst now sent me away empty; but He hath seen the labor of my hands, and thou art rebuked." And Laban feeling the reproof answered thus unto Jacob:—"How, therefore, come thou, I pray, let us make a covenant between us, and let it be a witness between me and thee."

Jacob, eager that amity be again restored, took a stone and set it up as a pillar saying unto his brethren:—"Gather ye, here, together, stones, and make unto us a mound, even a mound of witness." And they did as they were commanded, and they did eat there upon the mound, as a token of reconciliation and friendship. And Laban said unto Jacob, "Behold this mound and behold this pillar. Let these be witness that I will not pass by these unto thee, and thou shalt not pass by these unto me for harm. The God of Abraham and the God of Nabor judge between us." Then Jacob swear by the fear of his father Isaac, and they offer sacrifice, and tarry all night in the mountain, and they call that place Miz-pah, a beacon, or watch-tower, for they said: "The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another." Early in the morning Laban arose, kissed his sons and his daughters, and blessing them, returned unto his own place. Jacob also arose and departed.

Thus early in the age of the world as recorded in the Pentateuch was occasioned this interview, was erected this memorial, was intercharged this vow, was implored this benison, and was given this name that hath been preserved and transmitted, from line to line, throughout all intervening time adown the ages, until to-day the symbolic Miz-pah springes up unto us like some perpetual bloom, permeated with fragrance like unto that of the sweet incense.

And to-night we set it up as our standard, not as an ensign of war flaming with darts of fiery crimson, but softened and blended with tints of azure and gold, and not only here but also in our homes we look, and behold high upon our walls it appears an illumination that seems to invoke us protection. Again, upon a tablet is inscribed Miz-pah, and from us love like takes its departure, perchance over land, perchance over sea but rests not until it gains the goal it seeks, then happily it appears unto eyes that kindle at its coming and in the heart's pulsating soil it takes, as if by magic. Not for aye to be forgotten, but to bear full soon, most precious fruits of peace, and joy and love. And still again in that we are commanded to let no sacred truth pass us unheeded by, but strive to catch their glittering gold dust as they fly, and act upon each living thought as tho' it were our last, we could compare the glorious now with the distant past.

Thus, then, we why this night salute you, we who both not yet a score of years, yet since the earliest dawn of our scholastic days, all save one, have we together journeyed upward through life's mystic maze, and if, perchance, one has unthinkingly deceived another, forgiveness soon hath overspread her mantle, producing unanimity of soul, lasting, we trust, as are our life-long days. And now, tonight, as one who leaves his father's house, or wanders from his cherished mother's side, so we with music, mirth and joyful joys, prepare to walk henceforth, one our various untried ways. And may it not be asked of us, in fearful doubt, in aftertime, of those who personated our six churches, where are they, or, where, where are the one?

But, though as time's forward, flowing tide,
Shall bear us safely o'er life's billowy waters
So,
And twice in memoriam of the happy past,
The oath that would not linger will not last.

We feign would bring from out our store house
Treasures new and old,
And rear us a memorial tower,
Whose worth surpasses gold.

'Tis said that we are builders, and if so we will not wait the architects' command that bids us "Lay a sure foundation that our structures firm shall stand." Our structure firm shall stand! Long since, in days and years agone, when life and youth with us were young, its corner and foundation stones secure were laid, and in their inner shrine were hidden many a relic of the olden time; as letters learned and added each to each producing words, and words were read and spelled, and hieroglyphics formed till penmanship is formed, and drawn designs by hands that gloried in their cunning, and figures proved in wonderous ways, and language made a science, and much of earth, and heaven within our common center brought, and others such as these were safely sealed within those silent, chiseled walls.—Not without ceremonial rites, but sprinkled with the morning prayers, and holy psalms, and chant of sacred lays. Thus the foundation stands, and upon this rests base and die, and all that form the pedestal. These are composed of substance like unto the first, save that the surface is more brightly burnished; and the texture finer and more delicately wrought, and upon these our tower begins to rise and in its symmetry of form a nonagon assumes, having nine faces, made pervious to light, looking afar along nine separate ways. And now as we gaze upon our fabled well, not with affright lest we be changed to birds of flight as were the Pierides, the daughters nine who challenged the nine muses, but rather with delight; for as we mount each step doth seem anew to greet us as some well remembered friend, for lo! upon each solid surface rests engraven, works more significant than those we laid within the sacred shrine. For here are figures wrought in ways more intricate, problems solved by signs and integral and differential calculus, books made perfect by their perfect keeping, language more scientific and perfect made. Thoughts clothed with words and these adjusted and combined produce originality of mind, these interspersed are meekly mingled with the thoughts of nobler minds, with here and there, a stanza, line or couplet from the poets, great and gifted, the beloved of all time. And here also is read the government and history of all lands, laws of all animate life sustained by supreme hands, phenomena of earth, sea, air and skies, made comprehensible and manifest to mortal eyes. Language interpreted, geometrical display from base to summit.—Flowers also understood bedeck the stair throughout the livelong winding way. And upward by this winding stair for time long past our willing feet have trod, making every step a stepping stone which, should be removed as long as we shall bear us in his name.

And here we pause and carve our names that others coming after may take heart from those who passed before. And now we gain the summit, here our entablature we rear having nine angles, each space between looking a separate way. These we adorn with precious gems as fit nine passions best. Upon the first firmly inlaid is set a coronet of pearls, these are of purity, the emblem. The second bears a crown of amethyst, of temperance, the token. The third a sapphire garland, of truth the sacred symbol.—The fourth a ruby chaplet, of charity the omen. The fifth an opal anchor, of hope the blest recursor. The sixth a cross of jasper, of faith the holy emblem. The seventh bears a scepter, its diamonds speak of firmness. The eighth a shield of emerald telling of peace and safety. A diadem of topaz, the ninth, bespeaketh friendship.—These are our sacred emblems, our innate aspirations, and our armorial ensigns. Above these, resting down upon the angles, rear we nine separate arches, these we shall call triumphal, with these we crown our tower and raise our waving ensign with its immortal motto, Miz-pah. Thus the grains of wisdom, already gathered, have we brought together with the precious gems from out our store house and rared unto ourselves a tower which shall forever stand as a token of love and peace between us. And as in our first architecture we have not entirely failed, let us take courage and rear from still finer material structures more grand and magnificent, till Haven shall crown our endeavors.

And as in other climes and other lands the watchmen dwelling upon the mountains cry at midnight, "Glory to God in the highest," and as the cry breaks upon the silence of another and is caught up and repeated, "Glory to God in the highest,"—and as the echo from one to another, again and again is repeated until the archway of heaven resounds with the anthem of "Glory to God in the highest."—so we, from our stations in life, in the future, looking back to these years spent in harmony together, recounting minutely the events of the eve that we took our departure, casting one glance at our structure, remembering the vows it betokens, behold yet our still living Miz-pah, and cry as the voice of the watchman cryeth from brother to brother, "The Lord watch betweeen thee and me when we are absent one from another."

Not so Bad as We Seem.

GERTIE HAUSE.

People say we're only girls,
Sadly frivolous, thoughtless, free;
But we are, I can assure you,
Not so bad as we seem to be.

For some mysterious reason, arising no doubt from that little misunderstanding in the garden of Eden, we girls seem not to be fully appreciated. Just because Adam was created first it does'nt necessarily follow that he was superior to Eve. Oh, no! all later inventions are a vast improvement upon the original, and but for her bold, resolute and adventurous spirit, for aught we can see, they would have remained in the garden to this day with no knowledge of the beautiful world outside. But Eve was uneasy, she wanted to know something, she longed for a world to explore and subdue, for knowledge and all the great opportunities, for lofty genius and towering ambition, so she reached forth and boldly plucked the forbidden fruit, ate of it, handed it to Adam and bade him take his share of it, and for a wonder he plucked up courage, or else lacked the courage to refuse, it is not plain which. At any rate he ate of the forbidden fruit, and after skulking around two hours trying to hide among the trees and bushes, came forth, and to his everlasting disgrace be it said, tried to lay all the blame upon Eve. But his plea was overruled, they were both sent from their flowery groves, and then and there commenced the first emigration westward, and to what has it led? During all the centuries that have intervened between that day and this, the steady tramp of the emigrant has been heard, and when woman has not been at the front pointing to the haven ahead, she has ever stood beside her husband or father or brother and whispered words of comfort and encouragement, without which, their undertaking would have been a failure. Then why, pray, should a woman look up to any Adam and call him Lord and Master? Lord and Master indeed! If husbands want authority over their wives they should adopt them, not marry them.

The man was tempted by woman to eat, but he took to drink afterwards of his own accord. In the beginning woman was superior, is now, and probably ever will be, and for that reason we don't regret that we are girls. We're happy, we girls, and it is said that our school-days are the happiest of our lives; it may be true, but our own memories do not extend back to that period when we were not school girls. Still we have a great deal to endure; everything is laid to the school girls. Should any so-called slang expression be introduced which is just a little worse than was thought possible, it is immediately put down as school-girl's slang. I wonder if school-girl's slang is so very much worse and so very different from any other slang. You never hear of school-boy's slang; they probably don't resort to anything so mild. But we can endure it; censure has always been the tax paid to the public for being eminent.

Politically we girls are good, socially we are better, intellectually and morally we are the best. We don't vote, certainly not; only men stand around the polls and do that, and were we to do it also, we would bring ourselves down to their level. No, of course we don't vote. But if we did, let me tell you there would be one such grand revolution in the affairs of the government that the sages of antiquity, if resuscitated, would hang their heads in shame. Do you suppose that if women held the power of the state, the assassin of any President would have been treated as this one has been? no indeed, he would have immediately received his just deserts—been shot as soon as a woman and a revolver could have been procured. Consider the amount of valuable time wasted in Congress by the continual wrangling and jangling of our Congressmen. Think you women occupying similar positions would waste their time in idle talk? No, of course they would not. But like Alexander the Great, after conquering all that lay before them, would sigh for more to conquer.

'Tis a lucky thing, for the male part of the population that we don't vote. Viewed from a philosophical standpoint, society is nothing more or less than a powerful electric shock caused by the attraction of two elements—positive and negative. Positive and most attractive are we girls; negative, those boys. The positive element being more highly charged, strongly attracts the negative, and after the tension passes a certain limit comes that gorgeous display and brilliancy, which we call in philosophy, lightning, but what is known in society as a wedding. Following this dangerous display, dangerous however only to the parties struck, comes that lingering rumbling report, known in philosophy as thunder, but called I believe in society, married life. Very often, however, the attraction between these two elements becomes less and less, until finally it disappears altogether, and very frequently occurs what we call in philosophy, heat lightning, but what they call in society, a divorce. This is never very dangerous, it being simply a reflection from the other. This usually succeeds in clearing the matrimonial sky and sunny days continue until another flash succeeded by more rumbling again, involves in gloom the social world, and so it continues. It is best therefore to protect one's self from these brilliant flashes by being isolated entirely from society, or what is easier and just as effectual, by hoisting high in social circles in full view the lightning-rods, poverty and independence.

Girls, take Puck's advice to the unmarried; "don't". Intellectually the boys are quite a failure. The graduating classes for years have demonstrated the fact that though they endure for a season, they cannot hold out to the end. They might perhaps learn a little something if their parents could manage in some way to get them in school before they have the idea that they know everything there is to be known; but such cases are as rare as they are desirable. Morally there is no comparison.

Survey the congregations of our various churches; fully two-thirds are women. It will be just so in the kingdom of heaven. Picture, if you can, the utter wretchedness of earthly existence without girls. You would stand it for a while, your very sympathy for each other would act as a stimulant, but finally, like Holmes' one-hoss shay,

"You'd go to pieces all at once,
All at once and nothing first,
Just as bubbles when they burst."

Then don't look calmly, coldly down on us and say we're only girls, but rather that because we are girls, we're not so bad as we seem.

Our Mutual Friend.

LIZZIE HAYDEN.

In hours of affliction, sickness or distress, we welcome and take to our hearts one who comes to sympathize, to cheer or comfort us. In times of prosperity or happiness, who is more welcome than he who appreciates our feelings and enters with spirit into our pleasures. Though diverse in opinions and ways of life as are the nations of the globe, each can find room in the heart for one who joys in their joys, or sorrows in their sorrows; such a one must be our Mutual Friend.

You know when we are separated for a long, long time from one, without hearing so much as a word from him, the attachment, however dear it may have been, gradually cools and at length ceases altogether. "Time heals all wounds." So if death robs us of one of our dearest and best friends, the rolling years will eicatrize the aching heart the loss has caused. Our Mutual Friend must be ever near us lest that friendship cease. Ah! he is near us making daily, semi, or tri-weekly, weekly or monthly visits on us all. Very hard indeed to find one in the wide world of civilization who does not catch an occasional glimpse of him. To describe his personal appearance I need only say that he is black and white, but he has many suits, and dresses, delighting quite as much in gay attire, as do the majority of mankind. How he is greeted by all; our news depots, public libraries, post-offices are thronged with eager waiters and watchers and when he arrives they make one grand rush that they may have the first word. The lucky one bears him away to his home, and if that home be illy managed, the youths assert their claim, pump all the gossip and small talk from him, then blandly consign him to the older members of the family. In other households, the lady of the place receives her guest, adjusts her glasses and takes his case into deep consideration. Elsewhere the lord of the realm monopolizes the visitor and treats him with attention and respect, especially when business topics and market reports are under discussion. During these short calls and breakfast chats, he generally discusses the affairs of the government, public scandal, the business outlook. He reports the loss of life on land and water, by fire or flood, by accident or sickness, and shows his good taste in the pastry line by now and then giving the ladies an excellent recipe.

He calls our attention to the fact that we can find boots and shoes at such and such a place, fruits and candies at No. 1 B—st., money to loan here, hardware for sale there, he knows just where and when we can see Lotta or Barrett, Bernhardt or Jefferson, Anderson or Kellogg, or anybody else. When our friend comes for a more prolonged stay, he provides himself with an overcoat, the color and quality depending upon the atmosphere in which he expects to spend most of his time. For the library or study he chooses a substantial one of sombre hue firmly made. His parlor suits are very gay, flashing in gold or silver, or decorated with flowers as best suits his fancy. He comes well supplied with interesting topics for conversation and is a most delightful companion under any circumstances. How nice to stroll with him some warm lonesome afternoon to a shady nook on the river bank and there quiet the unrest of the mind by confiding in him. His thoughts are clothed in such beautiful language that whatever subject he attempts he draws our attention, and holds us captive in admiration. When sad or depressed go to him; he will either turn our thoughts in other channels or else send you to the keeping of the supreme power. What would our schools do without him? It is a question whether there would be any school, but for him. Whatever we want to know we can find of him, if we can ask the right questions, for it is said that he knows all about the lives and works of all the ancient and modern men of importance. For all his knowledge he often assumes a most undignified mien and rattles off nursery rhymes to the little folks. He can hold the boys under control, he often talks love to loving maidens in lovely places. The rising young men make him their confidant and adviser. There are John Harmons, Eugene Wrayburns, Lightwoods, Boffins, Veneerings, Podsnaps, school-masters, mistresses, and scholars in every community, but notwithstanding their wide differences in character and position they have one and the same mutual friend.

There are some, however, who have been imposed upon by one who in the garb of this friend is a deadly foe. Like almost all other impostors he is a coward, working upon the minds of the young boys and girls instead of those older and wiser; telling glaring falsehoods and making base representations which, though luring are deteriorating the character and injuring the morals. This foe generally assumes a gaudy yellow coat of cheap material, travels at cheap rates on cheap roads and lets his work result in cheapening the participants generally. Young friends, put your armor on, be on the lookout for the foe, fight him, kill him. Your safeguard lies in an acquaintance with the true friend, then the allurements of the wolf in sheep's clothing will not affect you. If you cannot recognize this friend of friends, ask some one to introduce you. When once you know him you cannot forget him. What he was to our forefathers, he is to us and will be to coming generations. Reverenced by the ignorant, admired by the majority, loved by the scholar, he lives with us, for us, through us.

As these essays consume much more type and space than we anticipated, we are compelled to pause here for the present. The remaining four essays will appear in our next issue.

A Word of Caution.

As is usually the case where an article of true merit has attained a world wide reputation by its wonderful results, as the celebrated Electric Bitters have done, certain unprincipled parties have endeavored to imitate them, and expect to induce an unsuspecting public to purchase their fanaudulent wares. Ask your druggist for the genuine Electric Bitters, that are guaranteed to cure, and take no others. Sold by all druggists at 50c.

THE merchant or the manufacturer in these days who sits down in his store-room or workshop and waits for the public, instead of calling upon them through the press, will generally live long enough to look out with discontent upon his own ruin, while his neighbor is prosperous and contented. Judicious advertising has advantages which no sane man doubts.

A True Blessing.

It would indeed be a blessing to poor weak, nervous, debilitated, suffering humanity, if druggists would stop selling the many vile purgative pills and cathartic compounds advertised for the cure of liver complaint. Although they afford temporary relief, at the same time they weaken the digestive organs, and compel a continued and increasing use of the same. Sufferers from dyspepsia and liver complaint do not need a cathartic, but should use some true medicinal tonic that will strengthen the digestive organs, and heal the diseased tissues of the stomach, liver and bowels. Such a remedy is Brown's Iron Bitters, and it never fails to effect a permanent cure. If you continue to live in poor health, and are determined to die before your time, you have only yourself to blame.—Courier.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JULY 6, 1882.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

SPLENDID hay weather.

JOHN CAMPBELL was in Tecumseh over the Fourth.

PROF. MCLEAN, of Ann Arbor, was in town yesterday.

ERNEST CLARK, of Chicago, is visiting L. F. Wheeler.

WILL GRAY and wife, of Elkhart, were home to spend the Fourth.

OUR report of the Alward reunion is necessarily deferred until next week.

WILL BASS, of Lawrence, Van Buren Co., was the guest of O. C. Tefft last Saturday and Sunday.

ROBERT CUPPLES has been making extensive improvements upon his dwelling house on Logan street

SOME wheat will be cut in this vicinity next week, but the bulk of the harvest will come week after next.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will preach next Sabbath A. M. on 'The Mourner Comforted", and in the P. M. on "Hope".

FATHER J. S. MCRAY died Tuesday night aged 85. He will be buried on Friday at 2 P. M., from the residence of Mr. Albert Vedder.

A STRAWBERRY and ice cream festival will be held at the Universalist parsonage to-morrow evening, July 7th. A general invitation is extended to all.

THE reports of School Commencement and the Fourth of July encroach upon our columns to such an extent this week, that we are obliged to omit the "Amateur Farm" letter.

JAS. B. COLVIN, of Raisin, has his new horse barn completed. It is a model of convenience and beauty.—Any one designing to put up such a building had better call and examine his plan.

WM. H. MATHER has just erected a new monument upon his lot in the cemetery. It is a plain base and shaft of Vermont granite, but is one of the handsomest and best proportioned monuments in the cemetery.

IT looks as if A. W. Slayton's business was on the increase. We notice he has come out this week with a very neat and tasty dray for the delivery of furniture, which will be a great convenience for his customers.

J. A. MUNGER'S horse became frightened last Friday afternoon on Pottawatamie street, and after a few frantic efforts succeeded in throwing Mr. Munger, his wife and himself all [illegible] pretty thoroughly.

MISS FANNY STOCKING will begin a summer term of six weeks in her private school on Monday, July 17th. Younger pupils who attend the public schools can take this course before the regular fall term begins the first Monday in September.

WARREN C. DEWEY, of New York city, who is spending a few days with his family at his father's, in Cambridge celebrated the Fourth in Tecumseh. Mr. Dewey is getting a fine start in his profession—the law—and is well pleased with his location and prospects.

THE reception of the graduating class which took place at the home of Elida James last Monday evening was well attended considering the inclement weather, and those who were present passed a most enjoyable evening. It was a fitting finale to the exercises of commencement week.

REUBEN MATHIAS, formerly of Tecumseh, was drowned in Phelps' Lake in the town of Cambridge last Tuesday. He was in a small boat with two boys, one of whom fell out. He plunged in to rescue the boy and was drowned, while the boy who went overboard was saved by his companion.

WHILE Misses May DeWolf and Anna Robbins were driving Mr. DeWolf's horse last Friday, the harness broke letting the buggy upon the horse's heels, and he ran upon the side walk in front of Sutton and Swan' store and threw both young ladies out. May DeWolf suffered a few bruises but Miss Robbins escaped unhurt. It was a fortunate escape.

CHILDREN'S DAY was celebrated last Sabbath at the Christian Church at Ridgeway grandly. It was the supreme day for the Sabbath School of that church. The interior of the edifice was beautifully decorated with living flowers and evergreens. Sweet singing birds hung from each chandelier in rich profusion, keeping time with the vocal and instrumental music of other choristers. The declamations, readings and other exercises were all that could be expected, and George Oliver, the Superintendent, together with the officers and teachers acquitted themselves nobly. The Rev. C. C. Sink preached to a crowded house in the evening, and the whole days work of this church will be long remembered.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

HOW IT WAS CELEBRATED THIS YEAR IN TECUMSEH.

A Long List of Attractions Enjoyed by a Tremendous Crowd.

The Fourth of July 1882 has come and gone. The program of exercises which had been arranged for the day was carried out substantially as previously published. The special train from Adrian was late in arriving which delayed the morning procession, but the exercises went off very creditably nevertheless. The weather could not well have been improved. The rain of the previous night laid the dust nicely and made it inconvenient for the farmers to work, and so everybody came to town. Tecumseh never saw so large a crowd before. It was a well behaved crowd too, as there was no drunkenness to be seen, and not an accident occurred during the entire day. At ten o'clock A. M., the hour for the exercises to begin, the streets were filled with people.

The procession was formed on Chicago street near the East Branch school by the Marshal of the day, A. W. Mills, assisted by P. S. McKinnon, C. T. Cummins and S. W. Bordine, in the following order.

Adrian K. T. Band.
Co. C., Mich. State Troops.
Tecumseh Broom Brigade.
The Hudson Battery.
Tecumseh Fire Department—steamer and two companies.
Citizens in carriages.

The following line of march was observed. The procession moved westward on Chicago st. to Pearl st., south on Pearl to Pottawattamie st., west on Pottawattamie to Union st., north on Union to Logan st., east on Logan to Pearl st., south on Pearl to Chicago st., east on Chicago to Evans st. south on Evans to Kilbuck st. east on Kilbuck to Maumee st., thence south to Bill's grove.

The exercises in the grove, which proved to be a beautiful place for them, as there was plenty of room for the large crowd gathered there, were presented in the following order.

Remarks—Rev. R. S. Pardington.
Invocation—Rev. W. H. Babbitt.
Music by the Band—Hail Columbia.
Prayer—Rev. C. E. Conley.
Music—Serenade.
Reading the Declaration—Rev. J. Phelps.
Music—Flying Artillery.
Oration—Col. Chas. S. May.
Music—Yankee Doodle.

The entire program did not exceed one hour and a half. It was a model of excellence and was evidently enjoyed by the crowd. It is unnecessary to speak in commendation of the Adrian Band. Col. May was at his best. His oration was short, but it was right to the point and every word was heard by the entire audience. As [illegible] justice, we refrain from any attempt at one. The other parts of the program were brief but appropriate. The crowd was dismissed for dinner.

AFTERNOON.

Shortly after one o'clock the procession of fantastics formed on the corner of Chicago and Union streets and headed by the band, marched to Bill's race track. This procession was not large in numbers, but what it lacked in quantity it made up in quality. Mr. D. P. Anthony and Joe Russell were the judges and awarded the prizes as follows:

First prize was given to the man and woman.

Second prize to the double cart.

Third prize to the fire department.

Then came the bicycle riding which was well done.

The display of Japanese fire works came next and then the free for all foot race. The prize in this race was won by a "culled gemman" from Adrian by the name of Smith.

A prominent feature in the day's program was the Broom Brigade. They occupied a prominent position in the parade, and in their drill at the Opera House which took place at six P. M, they delighted a large audience with their beautiful display. They were commanded by Mrs. A. D. Lawrence. We doubt if there is a military company in the State which can successfully compete with them.

The exercises of the day closed with a grand show of fireworks in the evening. Taken all in all, the committees in charge have good reason to be satisfied with the celebration. The weather was propitious, the crowd immense and all who came here seemed to enjoy themselves.

OUTSIDE ATTRACTIONS.

Aside from the regular order of exercises, there were many attractions which helped to make up the festivities of the day.

The stores on main street and many private residences were handsomely ornamented with the National colors and green boughs, which added much to the appearance of the village.

Col. Wood of Adrian had a tent in the grove in which he exhibited fifteen hundred living curiosities.

The bowery dance of Keyser and Macham was well patronized from sunset till the small hours of the morning.

The Davey dramatic club of Detroit gave two entertainments in the afternoon and evening.

The horse races on Bills' track in the afternoon were quite well patronized, there being five races in all.

In the stallion class there were two entries: Banker Rothschilds and Siam Chief. The former won the first purse.

The "nearest four minutes" class had five entries: Tecumseh Chief, Maggie Osborn, Trustee, Barbara Leslie and Taylor. Chief won in 3:59, Trustee, 2d.

In the four year old class there were four entries: "Hunter," Elliott's Sorrel Mare, "C. D. Bills," and Bell Brandon. Hunter won first money and Elliott's mare second.

The Adrian excursionists are under obligations to the Lake Shore railway for their magnificent accommodations. The special train consisted of two 2d class coaches, two cabooses and nine box cars.

The celebrated walkist, Ambrose Hunter failed to put in an appearance or even to send an apology for his non-appearance. The committee have not yet ascertained what ailed him.

Geo. W. Steuben, Captain of the Hudson gun is a grandson of the Steuben of revolutionary fame who had his name changed from Arnold. Supt. Curtis sent the gun over from Hudson at special rates and returned it free of charge.

The Medical Corps of the U. S. Army.

EDITOR HERALD:

Permit me to make the following quotation from a memorandum issued by the Secretary of War, dated June 14th, 1882. "For the information of persons desirious of entering the Medical corps of the U. S. army:"

"The candidate must be between 21 and 28 years of age, without any exceptions, and a graduate of a Regular Medical College, evidence of which, his diploma, must be submitted to the board."

It is evident from the above that Homœopathy has no "legal standing in the U. S. army," neither has it any in the navy. In conclusion it may be stated that the science of medicine as well as surgery ignores all isms and dogmas, and that those who believe in and practice them will not be admitted into the Medical corps of the U. S. army, nor as members of the American Medical Association.

A Beneficent Action.

The miserable looks and feelings of those confined at desks or work tables are caused by weak Stomach, Kidneys or Bowels. Parker's Ginger Tonic without intoxicating has such a beneficient action on these organs and so cleanses the poisonous matters from the system, that rosy cheeks and good health are soon brought back again.—Express.

BEFORE THE BALL.

Countess Marie Antoinette Helversen was indisputably beautiful. She possessed the rare beauty that no one questions—not even women. When such a beautiful woman passes along the street all turn to look at her, just as in the morning when their paths lead in an opposite direction, they turn to behold that spot in the east where the sun rose clear and radiant.

Countess Marie Antoinette knew how beautiful she was. How would it have been possible for her not to know it?—Was she coquettish? Certainly, but not in that unpleasant way that is often obtrusive. She rejoiced in her pretty face; she rejoiced, as a consequence, in all that tended to enhance its prettiness—in adornment, ornament and fine toilets.

Naturally, Countess Marie Antoinette had endless admirers and suitors. The most earnest of them were the two neighbors of her parents, Camill von Leeringen and Ernst von Prinzthal. Camill was the most dashing officer that could be imagined; he was not only a famous dancer and horseman, but he talked well, and played the piano brilliantly. His castle was magnificent, and superbly arranged. His stables were well supplied. He had, indeed, debts, but debts are, for the most part, an evidence of riches. Ernst von Prinzthal was, on the contrary, quiet but earnest.

Both sued for Marie Antoinette's hand, and each in his own way was filled with [illegible] towards the other. This uncertainty could not continue longer. One of them must yield his place, if murder or a death-blow did not remove him. But which one? The parents permitted to the daughter her free choice. And Countess Antoinette? Really she had not considered whom she would choose.

The day before the garrison ball (before a ball Antoinette was more radiant, more joyous and more conquering than ever), the two suitors came to Castle Helversen at the same moment, and almost attacked each other in the salon. The result was that they urgently and earnestly begged Countess Antoinette to render her final decision.

"Make known to us by some token which of us is the favored one—which of us you will make happy with your hand," cried Camill von Leeringen.—"Yes, let us know our fate to-day, for only under this condition can we give up the duel which the scene of to-day has rendered almost unavoidable. The one whom you reject will leave the scene of combat. Will you do so?"

"O, you must, indeed," cried Ernst von Prinzthal, "for, Antoinette, I cannot endure longer the torments of this uncertainty. I love you. Do you understand what that means? It means that I shall suffer always if you do not say, 'You shall find new life with me.'"

"Well, for my part," said Countess Antoinette, laughing, "I will give my decision this evening. At this moment I really have not the time, my head is so full. The modiste has promised me my ball-dress at noon, and it is now eleven o'clock. It comes direct from Paris, and I have no idea of the style, scarcely of the color. Then, until this evening—"

"And let us know at the first glance which of us has to hope, and which of us has to despair," said Ernst von Prinzthal, in a hoarse voice, while his breath [illegible] you will give life and happiness, then wear a red rose in your hair. Will you? But if it is Cavalier Leeringen, then—"

"Then, of course, wear a white one," smiled the officer, showing his whitest of teeth. "Roses vary commonly in these two shades, as does wine."

"So let it be, so let it be," merrily said the Countess Antoinette. "But now adieu. I hear a carriage in the court. I wager it is the modiste and my ball-dress."

The evening came. Antoinette stood before her mirror in all the magnificence of the dress from Madam Leontine, of Paris. She was beside herself with delight. In its style, material, and shading of colors, the ball-dress was a masterwork of elegance. It was of the palest rose tint, not the rose red that recalls the color of the hundred-leafed rose, but the shade that suggests either the winter-rose, when fully blown, or the tip of the diamond petal that has almost a yellowish shimmer. In this toilet, which harmonized wonderfully with her complexion, her eyes, and her chestnut-brown hair, Antoinette was sweet enough to kiss. There remained only the question of the flower for her hair. Before her lay a cluster of dewy roses that the gardener had just brought. She must choose. She thought of the important role the color of her flower must play this evening.

But did she think of the wooers themselves? Did she love one more than the other? She was extremely fond of both, but of which one particularly? She scarcely knew. Did she think that the handsome officer was a little fickle and a little frivolous, that he was somewhat skeptical as well, somewhat reckless, and somewhat extravagant? Did she remember that a trifle less attractive tone had sounded in the voice of Ernst von Prinzthal, that he was benevolent to the poor, and that on this very morning she had seen a tear sparkle in his eye?

No. What things of such a kind thinks before a ball? Who thinks of such things in the blissfulness of a new toilet?

It was really impossible to wear the red rose with the blossom tint of the dress, that shaded so softly. But the tea-rose, the heart of which only glowed into a creamy shade, completed her toilet in the most enchanting manner.

"O!" murmured Antoinette, as she fastened the rose in her hair. "Triumph for the cavalier! The prize is his!"

Many years after a woman sat grieving in a cold back room of a great house in a large city. She was sick and suffering, and aged before her time. She was a widow—although her husband lived somewhere in the world outside, in disgrace and degradation. After he had spent her fortune, deceived and scorned her, he had left her. The deserted woman, now sick and poor, turned the leaves of a prayer-book by the feeble light that a street lamp threw in the miserable room. Her glance was attracted by a dead blossom that lay, dry as dust, between the leaves. It was black and dry from age, but it had once been beautiful. It was the wreck and ruin of a once white rose.

The Game of Texas.

Let the hunter come to Ysleta and procure a good saddle animal and one for packing his traps on and start for the Guadalupe or Waco Mountains. The large cinnamon or brown bear, second in ferocity and size to the dreaded grizzly of California; the well-known black bear, deer, antlers, Mexican lion, fox, turkey and a species of elk with which these mountains are filled, while on the plains the antelope is found in endless quantities, going in herds of from fifty to 200; and the mountain streams, of which the Black River and Blue River are the most noted, are filled with mountain trout, and the lakes are covered at all seasons with ducks, including the mallard, grayback, and all the varieties of teal. In the low country and along the river are found the noted California quail and the sage hen. The quail are of a species that are very easily netted, and their abundance can best be illustrated by the fact that last year two of our citizens netted over 2,000.—El Paso Times.

Mr. F. B. Brock, in the Journal of the Franklin Institute, describes a mechanical telephone which, without the aid of a battery, transmits and reproduces sounds, loud, clear and distinct, at long or short distances. It consists of a simple helix surrounding a soft iron core, having no magnetic connection, and acted upon by a thin strip of iron connected with the north or south [illegible] or more magnets. The strip vibrates in unison with the transmitting or receiving diaphragm by means of a felt cushion or other connecting medium. This construction, it is said, constitutes a magneto electric machine or generator, whereby the voice itself produces the electric current by which the sounds are transmitted to and reproduced by a similar or corresponding instrument at the other end of the line, there being no current in the helix or on the line excepting that so produced, and no other magnetism in the soft iron core inside the former.

A Modest Request.

A little Boston girl who had seen an engraved copy of Millais' "Princes in the Tower" in a picture-shop window, went in the other day and said to the shop-keeper: "I came to ask you if you would please take that picture out of your window. Every time I pass I look in, and the picture is so sad it makes me very unhappy. Won't you please take it away?"—New York Tribune. A Chicago man who had seen a pie lying in a baker-shop window for several months, went in the other day and said to the shopkeeper: "I came to ask you if you would please take that pie out of your window. Every time I pass I look in, and the pie is so soggy and time-defying it makes me very unhappy. My wife, who used to make pies, is dead. Won't you please shoot the pie?"—Chicago Tribune.

The Scene of the Assassination.

Phœnix Park, Dublin, is the largest public park in Ireland, and nearly three times as large as the Central Park. It is on the Liffey River, and within its boundaries are the vice-regal lodge of the Lord Lieutenant and the lodges of the Chief Secretary and the Under Secretary. All official business is transacted at the [illegible] and balls are generally at the lodge.—The park is full of walks and drives, lined with bushes and trees, where men could easily conceal themselves and easily escape pursuit. There are large open lawns, one of them called 'Fifteen acres,' where the Land League has been holding meetings every Sunday. These meetings have been largely attended and very bitter in their nature.

A Chinaman who has been eight years in America, and who has in that time acquired a fair education, has established in New York an agency for supplying coolie labor. House servants he takes a special delight in procuring. The agency is a success, and New Yorkers feel threatened with a pig-tail hegira from San Francisco.

The cavalry of the Turkish Army is described as a large, well-armed circus troupe. A witness of the recent review of the Sultan's troops says that the horsemen threw their horses flat to the ground, every animal falling upon the same side; the soldiers, dismounting as the beasts went down, flung themselves behind their steeds and commenced firing as skirmishers.

A revenue posse in Georgia captured a large still near Elberton the other day, and while lying in wait for the owner to come up an immense black wolf approached one of the beer stands and commenced helping himself. The wolf could have been shot, but the officers were too intent on capturing the owner of the still to molest the animal.

A pair of cruel London parents tried to stop their girls from keeping late hours by cutting off the hair of the young ladies. The papa was summoned before a magistrate, who, after remarking that the old gentleman had no right to disfigure his daughters, bound him over in £50 to keep the peace with them and toward their hair for three months.

A collection of Japanese maples, numbering fifty-one species, were delivered in Golden Gate park, San Francisco, recently. The collection promises to be one of interest if it can be made to flourish intact. The leaves are nearly all small, but are beautifully shaped. Some of them are variegated, pink and green being one of the color combinations presented.

A resident near Oswego, N. Y., saw a large rat crawl through a hole into a box that contained a few oats. Mr. Dennis stopped the hole in the chest, raised the lid and put his cat in. He examined the box the next morning and cat and rat seemed to be meditating, each minding its own business. He shut down the lid and took another look the next morning. The same state of affairs existed as before. On the fifth morning he opened the chest and the cat and one-third of the rat remained.

Beware of Them.

A good article that has achieved success, and attained a world-wide reputation by its true merits and wonderful results, is always imitated. Such is the case with Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Already unprincipled parties are endeavoring to delude an unsuspecting public by offering imitations of this most fortunate discovery. Do not be deceived, but insist on having the true remedy, and take no other. For sale by all reliable druggists everywhere.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc., David Sexton.

Relief Found at Last.

Carmel, Ind.

A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: I was afflicted with derangement of the Liver, which caused a general derangement of my whole system. Had three-day ague for two years, from which I found no relief until induced to try your Taraxine, which I am happy to say affected a cure. I am enjoying fine health and have had no ague for over one year. Yours, etc., John Jeffries.

A Positive Cure.

A certain, safe and speedy cure for this disease has been discovered. A single application of Dr. Deming's Wonderful Remedy will convince the patient of its miraculous power of healing. With the first application suffering is practically at an end, and the sufferer is well started on the road to recovery. For sale by all druggists.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Whenever the farmer makes any particular crop a specialty, he should start with the highest type of seed that he can procure, and it should be his constant effort to improve upon it every year, by growing his own seed with the greatest care. He should have his ideal of perfection, and carefully select, every year, such specimens to breed from as come the nearest to his ideal. In this way an intelligent farmer will make a wonderful as well as a rapid progress, and will soon be able to put on the market a better quality than those who depend on purchasing seed in the open market, and will make a large profit, while his neighbors will get hardly enough to pay expenses.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by all druggists.

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principle. It restores that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these organs, bring them back to health and restore, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of Impostors, Imitations and Concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. A. FRASER'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets shows it at once as the greatest medicine for outward application. The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATIONS of LUNGS and CHEST, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, LOCKJAW, SPRAINS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it succeeds readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country we simply ask those readers of this notice who have not used this Ointment to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use are found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $250 of it in this List writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.
IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.
IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rate charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $3,980.14. The list includes 953 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. That Hired Man.

"He'd Been a Good One if He Had Stayed."

A good old Wethersfield farmer, pestered by the lack of help, told his son to slip down to New York and hire a man. But before he started he cautioned him to look out and not get loaded down with a dead beat, adding: "There are sharpers there who will beat you if you give 'em half a chance. You can tell one of them air beats as far as you can see him. Hire some good, lusty young fellow—a greenhorn if you can—any one but a dead beat." In a couple of days the new man was at work on the farm, and with a little practice would have broken in all right, but the old farmer, who was fretful and impatient, disliked his ways, and so he shipped him. The young man went to a neighboring place, and hired out, and the old farmer started for Gotham himself to get the right kind of a hired man. He came back with one last Thursday, stopping in Hartford to buy him some new clothes, the price of which was to be deducted from his wages. The new help wanted some pretty good clothes, and quieted the old farmer by telling him he could take the price out of the earliest earnings. Friday morning he set him to work in the garden in the rear of his barn. In about an hour the old farmer went out to see how he was getting along. He found him lying on some hay on the barn floor. "What is the matter?" said the farmer.

"I'm feeling bad—don't know what ails me."

"Do you ever drink?" asked the farmer.

"Yes, an' I s'pose that's what's the matter. I've been drinking purty hard of late."

"Why didn't you let me know it?" said the other, "and I would have fixed you up sunthin'. I'm a temp'rance man, though I always have a drop in the house for medicine. The old farmer went in and made a rum punch and gave it to the fellow. This had an inspiring effect, and the hired man said he felt better and started for the house. In a few minutes he came out dressed up in the new suit and started down the road toward Middletown, much to the old man's surprise. "Where you going?" sang out the farmer.

"To see Patrick," was the prompt answer, as the pedestrian struck a five-mile gait.

The old farmer's feelings may be better imagined than described as he saw $20 worth of his clothes on the road to New York. But at this moment his son came along, and, with a twinkle in his starboard eye, quietly said: "Where's the hired man, father?"

The old man, with eye still on the retreating figure, pointed to him and answered: "There he is! Don't you see him?" Then, after a short pause, he added: "But, my son, he would have been a good one if he had stayed."—Hartford Times.

Nice Summer Drinks.

A great many industries start afresh and with great impulse in the Spring of the year. One of these is the business of preparing "cooling beverages" for the Summer drinkers. The bottling establishments are in operation the year through, but in the Spring preparations [illegible] demand for the lighter drinking materials, if not for all, is regulated by the weather, to a great extent. If the season be hot and dry, the people will be in the same condition. The amount of sweetened water that is sold under various names is simply enormous.

Soda is water impregnated with carbonic acid gas. Carbonic acid gas is made from pulverized marble and vitriol. The marble is put into a receiver and mixed with the vitriol. The gas is thus generated, and after passing through purifiers or through water is ready to be charged into any kind of sweetened water. A bottling-machine fills a bottle in a second with the help of one operator. Over the bottling-table are the reservoirs containing syrups, connected with the bottling-machine. The carbonic acid gas, mingled with water, is let in, the syrup faucet is opened, and in the space of a second a bottle of ginger ale, sarsaparilla, pop or other mixture is ready for market.

The discovery of ginger ale gave a refreshing drink to millions. It is supposed that more would be sold if the name "ale" was not given to it. As it is nothing more than water sweetened with ginger syrup and charged with carbonic acid gas, it has no very marked intoxicating or even stimulating qualities. It is the great Summer drink—harmless, pleasant, refreshing and healthful. The item of bottles is an important one. The bottles cost more than the ale. Every bottle requires washing, of course, every time it is emptied. For this purpose a machine has been invented and put in operation to take the place of hand labor. This machine washes sixty bottles per minute, and does it as well as the most careful hand. The saving in labor is great. Besides the city consumption, the sea-shore trade will soon begin again. At Summer resorts the chief diversion of many is drinking. Why not? The salt air produces thirst.—Providence Journal.

A Negligent Conductor.

When the train going West over the Detroit, Lansing & Northern Railroad had pulled out of Howell the other day the conductor discovered that a man who should have stopped off there was still on board.

"Didn't you hear the brakeman call out your station?" he asked.

"Yes, I heard him call Howell, but how did I know it was the Howell I wanted to get off at? I've never traveled over this road before."

"Well, we don't have but one Howell on this line."

"Then why didn't you come to me like a man and say so? I'm from Nova Scotia, and how was I to know but that your country was full of Howells?"

"Passengers should know where they want to get off," muttered the conductor.

"So they should, sir, and if you had kindly come to me and notified me that this was the only Howell, and that this was the Howell where my aunt lives, I should not now be here, sir. I shall now decline to get off this train until I have the advice of her Majesty's Consul at Detroit!"

The Codfish.

Mr. Nye's Tribute to the Qualities of this Well-Known Character.

This tropical bird very seldom wings his way so far west as Wyoming. He loves the sea breezes and the humid atmosphere of the Atlantic Ocean, and when isolated in this mountain clime pines for his native home.

The codfish cannot sing, but is prized for his beautiful plumage and seductive odor.

The codfish of commerce is devoid of digestive apparatus, and is more or less permeated with salt.

Codfish on toast is not as expensive as quail on toast.

The codfish ball is made of the shattered remains of the adult codfish mixed with the tropical Irish potato of commerce.

The codfish has a great wealth of glad, unfettered smile. When he laughs at any thing, he has that same waste of mirth and back teeth that Mr. Talmage has. The Wyoming codfish is generally dead. Death, in most cases, is the result of exposure and loss of appetite. No one can look at the codfish of commerce, and not shed a tear. Far from home, with his system filled with salt, while his internal economy is gone, there is an air of sadness and homesickness and briny hopelessness about him that no one can see unmoved.

[illegible] the codfish makes himself felt and remembered. When he enters our household we feel his all-pervading presence, like the perfume of wood violets, or the seductive odor of a dead mouse in the piano.

Friends may visit us and go away to be forgotten with the advent of a new face, but the cold, calm, silent corpse of the codfish cannot be forgotten. Its chastened influence permeates the entire ranch. It steals into the parlor like an unbidden guest, and flavors the costly curtains and the high-priced lambrequins. It enters the dark closet, and dallies lovingly with your swallow-tail coat. It goes into your sleeping-apartment, and makes its home in your glove-box and your handkerchief-case.

That is why we say it is a solemn thing to take the life of a codfish. We would not do it. We would pass him by a thousand times, no matter how ferocious he might be, rather than to take his life and have our once happy home haunted forever by his unholy presence.

Costly Carelessness.

From time to time the papers tell us of persons who have blown out the gas-lights in their bed-rooms, instead of putting out the lights by shutting off the gas. Of course they have been found dead in the morning, suffocated in their sleep by the gas which had been pouring into the rooms all night. Persons accustomed to blow out lights given by lamps in their own homes should be especially careful lest their habit assert itself abroad, notwithstanding their knowledge of what they should do to put out a gas-light.

The stove-damper is sometimes partially closed, and the stove-door partially opened at night in a bed-room. During the night, the wind perhaps changes, outside air becomes damp and heavy, and the gas, instead of ascending in the cold chimney, is forced into the room. Here, too the sleeper sometimes passes quietly into the sleep of death, as the carbonic acid gradually arrests the action of the brain. Under no circumstances should the damper of a stove be closed in a sleeping-room at night.

Guests from the country are quite apt to leave the waste pipes in our city bed-rooms open, in the bed-rooms in which they sleep, thus giving free ingress into the rooms of sewer gas, with its germs of typhoid fever, or of other infectious diseases. A cautionary hint should be given them by their hosts.

People often leave vials containing poisons by the side of other vials that contain medicines that some person is using, and the contents of the former are sometimes taken or thoughtlessly administered instead of the latter, by the patient himself or by his attendant. Recently the life of a useful and worthy man was thus suddenly brought to an untimely end. The two should never be kept together.

Buying Good Stock.

No man should buy good stock of any kind unless he has good pastures, and fairly comfortable shelter for winter.—He buys, of course, with two objects in view: 1st, To replace the common with the improved, for the gratification that accrues from this: 2dly, That the profits may be enhanced. Neither object can be attained unless the animals be well kept on abundant grass in summer, and given such feed and protection in winter as will maintain, quite nearly, the summer condition. This is as easy to do with good, healthy thoroughbreds of any breed as with the dairy cow kept in such manner as will guarantee that she yields a profit.

It is too commonly the case at sales, that the animals of breeding age that are fat, outsell the regular breeders and large milkers that are thin. Men sometimes are badly deceived by preferring the animal that gives evidence of being apparently an easy fattener, to one that shows evidences of being a regular breeder. It should be borne in mind that it is easier to put flesh upon a thin animal, if bred with a view to flesh, than to get progeny from a shy breeder, rendered so by being made overfat through high feeding, or inheriting a strongly fixed tendency to fleshiness, accumulating this from ordinary feed; in other words, from grass alone.—National Live-Stock Journal, Chicago.

The Czar never receives anybody after 1 o'clock. The remainder of the day he spends in the palace sub-cellar, locked in a Marvingovski fire-proof safe, clad in his cast-iron ulster. He received Lieutenant Danenhower at 2, however, on that gentleman making an affidavit that he wasn't a Nihilist, and could not play on the cornet.

The less government we have the better—the fewer laws and the less confided power. The antidote to this abuse of formal government is the influence of private character, the growth of the individual.—Politics.

A Dog's Funeral.

Nearly a year ago a gentleman died in affluent circumstances at Kirkwood, and left a childless widow. The husband, who never enjoyed the proud distinction of being called a father, lavished his surplus affections on a fine shepherd dog by the name of Dash. This canine was provided for in his master's will by the setting aside of a certain house and lot, the monthly rent from which was to be appropriated to "Dash's sole benefit during his natural life." In this way the dog's days were comfortably provided for, and the gentleman's wife was named as Dash's guardian.—Shortly after her husband's death the lady went to New York to assuage her grief, but she didn't take the dog along. In her absence Dash was taken very sick, and a telegram informed her of the animal's affliction. True to the last will and testament of her late husband, she telegraphed to employ the most eminent physicians for Dash's treatment, which was done by a faithful servant. In a few days the wires informed her that Dash was dead. She admitted of no delay, but immediately started for St. Louis to conduct the obsequies and again act as chief mourner. Arriving here, a costly coffin was provided, and a hearse conveyed Dash's remains to Oak Ridge Cemetery. At that place they were interred with due solemnity at the feet of his dead master, in the [illegible] for him. A three-hundred-dollar monument, suitably inscribed, stands at the husband's grave, while a less pretentious one, costing one hundred and fifty dollars, rests at his feet, to mark the place where Dash lies.—St. Louis Globe.

Business is Business.

Why the Tongue is Given a Rest Around a Spot Worth $14,000,000 an Acre.

The land on which the Drexel building stands in New York cost its present owners at the rate of $14,000,000 per acre. It occupies the corner of Wall and Broad streets. Almost all the railroads on the continent are managed within 300 feet of this spot, and the general pressure of our immense financial system gives it a value which a few years ago could not have been dreamed of. Standing on the Drexel corner you may see men entering their offices with rapid step, and if you could follow them you would find that their transactions, though of enormous sums, were accomplished with the smallest amount of words imaginable. No time to waste when so much is to be done in a few hours. The day here is from 10 to 3 o'clock, and one house closes an hour earlier.

Such men are always ready to act, hence there is less need to talk. If anyone attempts a conversation, he will find himself politely but positively neglected. Men may talk at their leisure, but not in the heaving and excited crowd in Wall street. Across from Drexel's is the United States Treasury, where about $80,000,000 of Government funds are held, and the rear of the Treasury (on Pine street) faces the great Turner Building. All around, as you cannot but feel, is wealth; not in lands or any representative shape, but in money.—Here money reigns; money is the theme. Moneyed men only are important, and if you want to see them, just come to this center of capital.—Troy Times.

Taking His Word for It.

A Randolph street saloon keeper who had long been bothered by a dead beat, tapped him on the shoulder the other day and said:

"My friend, I don't want you here any more."

"Don't you? I can hardly believe it, but of course I shall take your word for it. I suppose you'll set out the drinks on this sad occasion?"

"Oh, yes. Walk right up."

The saloonist had taken some forty-rod and added a liberal supply of cayenne pepper, dashed in some vinegar and poured in enough molasses to make the drink slip down. The beat poured out a stiff dram and tossed it off without stopping to breathe, and as he set down the glass and let the tears course down his bronzed cheeks he asked:

"Do I weep?"

"I should rather think you did!"

"Well, sir, I want you to distinctly understand that I'm not weeping on account of any trifle that has occurred here—not by a jugful! My emotion is occasioned by hearing of the death of an aunt. Good-day, sir."—Detroit Post.

A Call For Tears.

The following little incident furnishes an eloquent comment on the vile trade that lives by putting temptation in weak men's way.

Dr. John Hall, the eminent New York minister, stood on a boat in New York harbor. Beside him stood a plainly-dressed man. Not far away was a well-dressed young man who was tipsy. The people were making sport and laughing at the drunken man. Mr. Hall remarked to the stander-by.—

"They should hardly laugh at him."

The man then told Dr. Hall of his own troubles—how he fled from Scotland to get his wife away from drink; of her death from the effects of strong drink; of two of his children who inherited the love of liquor; and how he was then fleeing with them to a town in Ohio, where he was told liquor was not to be had.

To him, truly, it was "a thing to cry over."

We owe a debt to every great heart, to every fine genius, to those who have put life and fortune on the cast of an act of justice; to those who have added new sciences; to those who have refined life by elegant pursuits. 'Tis the fine souls who serve us, and not what is called fine society. Fine society is only a self-protection against the vulgarities of the street and tavern.—Considerations by the Way.

Echoes of the dog-show: "Isn't he just sweet?" "Oh, you dear, black-nosed old fellow, you." "Was the little poysy-wopsy hungry, was it?" "It was a good little darling then, so it was." Who wouldn't be a dog?—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The decrease in the public debt during June was $12,500,000.

Two members of the Arkansas Press association called at the white house and paid their respects to the president.

Thirty-seven clerks in the land office and twenty-nine in the patent office have been discharged.

The ordnance department has purchased 240,000 ounces of silver for the mints. The purchases of silver for the fiscal year averaged a little over $2,000,000 a month.

The naval board recommends to congress to appropriate $87,000 for repairs to the navy yards at the Long and Charlestown to their houses.

Gen. Sherman says he without all the military men on his staff, consisting of the proposition of Col. Dodge as he thinks he has, should be enough for the term of office.

It is expected that the House will finish its work on the appropriation bills this week, except so far as relates to acting upon the Senate amendments.

Secretary Folger has issued an order that no charges for police car fares will be allowed officers when traveling on official duty for distances of less than one hundred miles.

[illegible] representing the Fifth Illinois district in congress died here of apoplexy, Thursday evening. He had recently been home to arrange for a renomination, leaving his family at Mount Carroll.

The diplomatic appointments made by President Arthur Saturday are merely promotions. Lew Wallace is made envoy at Constantinople, John M. Francis minister to Portugal, and M. C. Cramer minister to Holland.

The general opinion of the best-informed members of the house and senate in regard to the probable duration of the session now appears to be that congress will adjourn sine die the 17th inst.

The senate and house conferees on the national bank charter bill have reached an agreement on all the sections except those relating to gold certificates and the overcertification of checks, on which another hearing will take place to-day.

The colored journalists adopted resolutions urging a constant effort to secure the largest benefits of education for the colored people, condemning as unjust the dismissal of Lucius Fupper from the army. The delegates paid their respects to Pres. Arthur.

The Rev. Dr. Hicks preached Sunday on the subject of the pardoning power of Christ, and said that Christ was able and willing to pardon even the greatest of criminals. While he did not mention the name of Guiteau, he spoke directly of the events of the past week. It is clear he whose discourse referred to them. He said, among other things that if Christ was now on earth his life would not be spared by the people a single week.

The house committee on elections has decided to give the seat now occupied by Mr. Tillman, of South Carolina to Mr. Smart, his contestant. In the Alabama case of Herbert vs. Herbert, the contest was dismissed, with leave to Mr. Herbert to withdraw papers without prejudice. In the other Alabama case, Smith vs. Shelley, the election under that the seat be declared vacant.

President Arthur has declined to give an interview to the reporters [illegible] A Cleveland man with a pain in his side called the executive mansion Wednesday and Dr. Marc Wilson undertook to cure the president. Eight telegraph wires have been strung into the house. [illegible] expenditure of $1,000 has been asked. All at the 14th and prepare the way since [illegible]

There was [illegible] sides, and there are threats that the bill will be passed over the president's head.

The railroad is considering the question of position assignments. The members of the committee [illegible] that such a course should be taken by the president in relation to the matter. It is probable that at an early day an order will be issued requiring certain from any danger of removal in case of nonpayment of assessments made by the committee. Some sixty men [illegible] necessary, in view of the storm of indignation and denunciation that is now sweeping over the country against the present methods employed by the congressional committee.

The recent report of a board of engineers, condemning the claims of the Illinois Central road upon the harbor of Chicago has been disapproved by Secretary Lincoln. From the statements made by the board he is driven to conclude that the proposed extension of one hundred feet is an encroachment which should be prohibited by the government, unless accompanied by strong conditions which the war department has no legal power to make or enforce.

Notwithstanding the fact that congress is almost on the eve of adjournment and the calendars of both houses are crowded with bills that will never again come to the surface, the introduction of new bills continues at every opportunity. The number already introduced in the present congress approaches close to seven thousand, a figure that is greatly in excess of that of any former session. Many of the measures thus introduced are merely for buncombe, but they indicate the amazing fertility of the American mind in the war of extending the recognized limits of legislation.

Third Assistant Postmaster General Hazen has completed a statement of fees to postmasters by his office of postage stamps, stamped envelopes and postal cards, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882. The total number issued was 1,744,371,938 pieces, of the aggregate value of $44,977,953; increase over the issue of the preceding fiscal year were 236,259,493 pieces, or 15.7 per cent., equal in value to $6,353,517. The appropriations for supplying these articles amounted to $1,038,000, of which $876,836 was expended, leaving an unexpended balance of $160,163, or 15.4 per cent. of the appropriations. Over 1,000,000,000 2-cent stamps and 350,000,000 postal cards were sold the past year. As a result of these figures, department officials feel warranted in asserting that, when the final statement of receipts and expenditures for the year has been completed, it will be found the postal service is self-sustaining. Of the deficiency appropriation of $2,852,25[illegible] made by congress last year to meet the expected deficiency in the postal revenues not one cent has been drawn from the treasury. This is the first year since 1861 in which the receipts of the postoffice department balanced its expenditures, with the exception of one year during the war of the rebellion. There were 43,222 postoffices in the United States on June 30, 1882, an increase of 1,710 over 1881.

CHANCERY NOTICE.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, First Judicial Circuit in Chancery. Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the County of Lenawee in Chancery.

Mary M. Wood, Complainant,
vs
John J. Wood, Defendant.

Before Frank R. Payne, Esq., one of the Circuit Court Commissioners in and for said County at the City of Adrian in said County, this 3d day of July A. D. 1882.

It satisfactorily appearing by affidavit on file, that the defendant, John J. Wood, is not a resident of the state of Michigan, but that he resides in the state of Ohio. On motion of D. B. Morgan, Complainant's Solicitor, it is ordered that said defendant appear in this cause within four months from the date of this order, or in default thereof, that the bill of complaint in this cause be taken as confessed by him. It is further ordered that within twenty days from the date hereof, said complainant cause a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper published in said county, for six successive weeks, once in each week, or that a copy of this order be personally served on said defendant at least twenty days before the time herein fixed for his appearance.

BEATTY

The Famous 27 Stop Beethoven Organs

Suitable for the Parlor, Chapel, Lodge, Church or Sabbath School.

FRONT VIEW
THE BEETHOVEN ORGAN.
Heighth, 75 ins., Length, 46 ins., Depth, 24 ins.
New Style No. 9000, Five (5) Octaves, Handsome Solid Black Walnut Case with Organ Bench and Music Book.
27 Stops, 10 Full Sets Golden Tongue Reeds.

—A BRIEF DESCRIPTION.—

PRICE Boxed with Organ Bench, Book and Music, ONLY $90.00

CASE.—Handsome Solid Black Walnut, manufactured so as not to take the dirt or dust. Top exactly constructed and kiln dried, so that it will stand the test of any climate; handsome rubbed finish, and highly carved and ornamented with arabesque designs in gold, fret music desk, pocket, handles and lamp stands. It is solid to look at, to sit upon.

ACTION.—Containing 27 Stops, with a great variety of Stop Combinations, enabling the performer to imitate (by following the simple instructions given) French Horn, Violin, Piccolo, Saxophone, Full Orchestra, Cello, Church Pipe Organ, and many other beautiful effects. In addition, it has six regular ordinary stops at your command.

27 STOPS, as follows:

1—Celloe, 8 foot tone.		14—Echo, 8 foot tone.
2—Melodia.		15—Diulciana, 8 foot tone.
3—Dulciana.		16—Diapason, 8 foot tone.
4—Manual Sub Bass, 16 foot tone.		17—Vox Celeste, 8 ft. tone.
5—Principal, 16 foot tone.		18—Vivina, 4 foot tone.
6—Bourdon, 16 foot tone.		19—Vox Jubilante, 8 and 4 foot tone.
7—Saxophone, 8 foot tone.		20—Piccolo, 2 foot tone.
8—Viol di Gamba, 8 ft. tone.		21—Cornet, Harmonique.
9—Diapason, 8 foot tone.		22—Orchestral Forte.
10—Viola Dolce, 4 ft. tone.		23—Grand Organ Full Stop.
11—Grand Expressione, 8 foot tone.		24—Right Knee Stop.
12—French Horn, 8 ft. tone.		25—Automatic Valve Stop.
13—Harp Aolean.		26—Right Duplex Damper.

BELLOWS.—Finest Treble Rubber, Upright pattern, three bellows combined, with four Steel Springs, with Automatic Valve Stop, an ingenious arrangement for preventing an over-supply of air.

REEDS.—10 Full Sets Reeds. Area of the Celebrated Golden Tongue (patented,) the tongues of which are secured to the block by dovetailing instead of ordinary rivet, which soon breaks or rattles. The Golden Tongue never breaks or wears out, holds its tone perfectly. No tuning in ever required after leaving the factory.

TONE.—Superb, Thrillingly Sweet and Pure. I challenge comparison with any instrument ever manufactured at four times the price. An Organ like the above, containing the same variety of music, would cost through high priced organ manufacturers at least $450. This combination of Reed-Board and Pipe Work bear in mind, is the BEETHOVEN is patented. No other organ maker dare build it.

PRICE.—The price of this Organ, which includes a Music Book, Organ Bench, Choice Music, &c., securely packed and delivered on board the cars at Washington, New Jersey, is Only $90.00.

TERMS.—The terms are Net Cash. Remittances may be made by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Registered Letter or Express prepaid.

WARRANTED.—The BEETHOVEN is warranted for six years. Shipped on one year's trial.

FACTORY.—Corner Railroad Ave. and Jersey St., Washington, New Jersey. Earnest attention day and night to fill all orders promptly.

To Whom it May Concern:

If the Beethoven Organ, after one hundred days' constant use, does not give you perfect satisfaction in every particular, and is in every respect as represented in this advertisement, I hereby agree to have it back and return you your money paid in exchange, with legal interest of New Jersey, (six per cent.) I further agree to pay freight charges on the instrument both ways, the money to be handed in trust, to be upon receipt of the instrument at Washington, New Jersey. I further agree, if requested, to exhibit it for any other organ or piano as above in my village.

Very truly yours,

Daniel F. Beatty

HOW TO ORDER.—Enclose the money for Beethoven Organ. I have read your statement in regard to it in this advertisement; and I order once on condition that it must prove exactly as represented in every particular, or I shall return it at the end of one year's use and demand the return of my money, with interest from the very moment I forward it, at six per cent., according to your offer. Be very particular to give your Name, Post Office, County, State, Freight Station, and on what Railroad.

☞ Be sure to remit by Bank Draft, Post Office Money Order, Registered Letter or Express prepaid.

SPECIAL TEN DAY OFFER TO THE READERS OF THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

I desire the Beethoven Organ introduced among the readers of this newspaper WITHIN THE NEXT TEN DAYS, so that all can see and appreciate its wonderful merits and stop combination effects. Now, if you will REMIT ME seventy-five ($75.00) dollars, I will ship you this organ immediately, and send you a receipted bill in full for ninety dollars ($90), which is the regular and only price at which this organ is sold. The price will soon be advanced to $125.00, on account of the increase in price of labor and materials used in its construction.

☞ I desire this instrument introduced without delay, and make this special offer so you may order one now. I look to future sales for my profit, as the Beethoven makes me thousands of friends. I regard this manner of introducing it better than spending hundreds of dollars in newspaper Advertising. The Organ speaks for itself. Often twenty sales have been traced from the first sold in a neighborhood.

☞ This offer is positively good for only ten days from date. PLEASE BEAR THIS IN MIND. This newspaper must be returned to secure this special price. If received from your post-office within ten days from this date it will be received by me otherwise, or you may accept by telegraph on the last day, and remit by mail on that day. I shall POSITIVELY refuse all orders under $90, unless accompanied with this newspaper, and payment must be mailed within ten days as specified.

DATED, WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY, JULY 6th.

N. B.—As this special offer is limited and will not be repeated, if you have not all the money in hand, it will pay you to borrow a part from your friends, and thus secure the best organ that can be offered, at a less price than any ordinary organ by other makers is usually sold at.

ESTATE OF LUCINDA THORP.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 3d day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present, Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition of Edwin B. Wood, administrator of the estate of said deceased, alleging that he has paid the debts of said deceased and the expenses of administration of said estate thus far incurred, and is ready to file his final account in this court, and praying for the allowance of said account for an assignment and distribution of the residue of said estate to and among the persons entitled thereto, and for his discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 31st day of July, A.D., 1882, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

SPRINGVILLE.

The ice cream and strawberry festival given by the I. O. G. T. was well attended and a good time enjoyed by all.

It begins to look a little dull in the village just now. On Tuesday of last week Ayres Bros. closed their store, there being some dissatisfaction in the partnership business. On Saturday Dept. Sheriff Johnson locked up all the agricultural implements the place affords, which were in the possession of Wm. H. Smith and owned by the McCormick Machine Co. Said ownership is disputed by an Ann Arbor company, they being the parties that locked up the implements.

Open air concerts by the S. C. B. every Saturday evening.

What makes you go home so early Sunday evenings? Ask Tom.

MACON.

G. W. Mitchel was in the village last week.

The festival at the hall last Friday evening was enjoyed by a large company.

W. S. Pennington has recently returned home from a four months' sojourn in Florida.

Mrs. Edith Osborn, of Sioux City, Iowa, is passing the summer with her mother, Mrs. Avery.

A. G. Oven of the Ann Arbor Medical College, and Elmer Hendershot, who is a student of the High School are home for the vacation.

Dr. Morden is entertaining his nephew, Dr. Harrington, of Canada, a recent graduate of the school of medicine at Ann Arbor.

At a meeting of the temperance societies last Monday evening, it was decided to discontinue for the present the regular meetings which have heretofore been held on alternate Friday evenings, and in their stead hold social meetings once in three weeks.

FRANKLIN.

Dr. Perkins has moved to the Center.

J. B. Whelan returned to Detroit last Monday.

Prof. A. H. Lowry occupied the pulpit of the Cong. church last Sabbath.

Most of the farmers are in the midst of haying, a few have begun harvesting.

Prof. H. C. Wilson, of the west side Blissfield school was in town last Tuesday, the guest of E. T. DeLapp.

Miss Emma Keeney, a teacher in the Saginaw schools, is spending her vacation at home. She will continue her teaching there next year.

A number of laborers from the Buckeye state came in the fore part of the week, and are now looking after their share of the harvest.

A young blacksmith has located at the Centre. He will be a helper for Wm. Deming some time in the future.

RIDGEWAY.

The date for organ concert—July 25.

Mr. and Mrs. John Houseman returned to their Clinton county home last Monday.

The fine day Tuesday, induced the farmers to cut a bunch of hay to get wet the next day.

The particulars of that bloody engagement (?) of Monday evening at the station, have not reached us. A running sketch may be expected from your East Ridgeway scribe.

The long expected pipe organ concert will take place at the Ridgeway M. E. church on Tuesday evening, July 25th, 1882. No time or pains is being spared in making this event one of the best and most enjoyable that the people of this vicinity have ever experienced. The program will be varied throughout, consisting of selections both sentimental and amusing. Mr. Wood, the manufacturer of the new pipe organ comes before the public ably assisted by the eminent organist, Mr. E. P. Sprague, of Detroit. Those who improved the opportunity of attending Mr. Wood's concerts in Tecumseh pronounce them the best ever given there. The entire proceeds will go for the benefit of the organ fund. The admission will be 25 cents single tickets, and children at reduced rates. Good seats will be reserved for those coming from a distance by applying to Henry C. Wilson, by mail, any time next week. Tickets will be on sale at the store of Strong & McNair at Tecumseh, and at the store of G. W. Clark & Son, Ridgeway, after next Monday. Those who have subscribed toward the purchase of the instrument can pay one-half the amount on the evening of the concert, or if convenient the whole amount would be acceptably and thankfully received by the subscription committee.

THE PEOPLE'S CYCLOPEDIA.

What, another Cyclopedia? Yes. Why? Because one is needed. A general Cyclopedia is a real want in every home and in every place of business. The Brittanica, Appleton's and Chamber's are too large and too expensive for the general reader. They are not too large and costly for the man of means and leisure. But the general reader is the farmer, mechanic, merchant and laborer. neither of whom as a rule, have time to consult such immense works. But very few can afford to purchase so costly a work.

A cyclopedia for the people should be comprehensive and should present a condensed account of the whole field of human knowledge.

The "People's Cyclopedia" is as comprehensive and as thoroughly arranged as a complete library. "Time is short" with the people of this busy age, and what of history, mechanism, invention, commerce, agriculture, philosophy, theology, science, art and trade, we want, we demand that it shall be compassed in as accurate and brief a manner as possible. We want a cyclopedia that will enable us to master any theory or fact we are looking for. Our grand-parents may have had the time and patience to read everything leading to or looking toward a fact or principle, we have not. So vast is the accumulation of knowledge to-day that we weary with elaborate investigation.

The People's Cyclopedia meets the FELT want of the age in this particular. It meets a want in the professional man as in the average reader. Some of its articles are lengthy where the importance of the subject requires it. But in no sense is it cumbrous like other Cyclopedias.

Its arrangement is admirable, and so renders it easy of consultation. A child can find what it desires in it. It is especially rich in its pictorial design. There are over 5000 engravings illustrating almost every department of knowledge. Its colored maps make it an ATLAS of the world. It is the LATEST cyclopedia before the public and hence it is the freshest and therefore a desirable work.

Its publishers stand ready to prove that it is scientifically correct. Its contributors are among the most eminent scholars of this century. One proof of its great popularity is that so great is the demand for it that the publishers have been obliged to put additional presses at work, and have increased the force in the bindery department.

The work is published by Phillips & Hunt, 805 Broadway, N. Y. Their agent, W. E. Dunning, will be in Tecumseh next week to circulate the work.

Read the following references. Prof. Olney of Michigan University says: "I am fully satisfied it is the Cyclopedia for the people. It is a great educational agency."

"Prof. Cocker also says: "The more I examine it, the better I like it."

Bishop Williams of Connecticut, says: "The articles are scholarly and well considered and their range is very great."

Henry Ward Beecher says: "It is just the book for reading, thinking American citizens."

Did You Know It?

You can strengthen the digestive organs, prevent costiveness, diarrhoea, and all bowel disorders by a timely use of Brown's Iron Bitters, a true tonic, a perfect strengthener.

Judge Hezekiah G. Wells, of Kalamazoo, has been made the presiding judge of the United States court of commissioners on the Alabama claims. His associate judges are James Harlan of Iowa, and Asa French of Massachusetts. Daniel W. Fessenden, of Maine, will be clerk of the court.

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tri one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Your truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

Jealousy.

Some poet has said that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, Jealousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. Jealousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

Opening Week at a Summer Resort.

BY A FLIRT.

Yes, I've been here a week. I've had just one
Flirtation, and already it is done.
The gentleman was Mr. Harry May,
We happened to arrive the self-same day.
We got acquainted, had a quiet talk,
And, in the evening, took a pleasant walk.
He came as an advance guard, so to speak,
Said Mrs. May was coming down next week.
When he said that, I vowed my lady fine
Should find him kneeling at another shrine.
To flirt with single fellows is a bore,
Unless they've other sweetheart to make rore;
But, when you chance to catch a married one
To flirt is naughty. Then it's lots of fun
Especially if you can make his wife
So jealous that she's very tired of life.
Well, during this past week I played each card
To capture him. I never tried so hard
To make a mash. And great was my success;
He won't get over it for years, I guess—
And I was at the height of rapture
To think how angry Mrs. May would be,
To-night she came, and I was all prepared
To shiver her the wax hated. Somewhat scared
At what might happen, though, I was, I own.
I let him meet her, at the stage, alone.
And it was after tea, an hour or two,
Before he took me to an interview.
I never was so mad in all my life.
The lady was his mother, not his wife!

THE UNCLE'S LEGACY.

BY WILLIAM COMSTOCK.

Our village, like villages in general, contained an eccentric old gentleman. His name was Pease; and, as he wore green spectacles, irreverent persons were accustomed to designate him by the name of "Green Peas." Notwithstanding the fact that he had some whimsical notions, he was a very well disposed man, and, in so far as his rather limited means permitted, he was generous to the poor.

But he had one nephew, a bright enough little lad, who was prone to mischief. Being of a very lively and active disposition, little Arthur liked to play tricks upon testy persons, and upon his Uncle Peise in particular.

As he grew older Arthur grew wiser, and by the time he had reached his sixteenth year he was remarked for his manly behavior and his intelligence. But Arthur's reformation came too late to prevent a catastrophe to his uncle which he deplored to the end of his life. He had been delighted, on a certain occasion, to see his uncle jump and hear him storm on account of a sharp darning-needle that the lad had slyly thrust into his leg.

The accident had serious consequences. The wound was difficult to heal, and, finally the uncle was obliged to have his leg amputated.

It may well be believed that, after that, Arthur played no more tricks on anybody, and that the uncle could never again endure the presence of his nephew.

Arthur was about fifteen years of age when "Green Peas" removed to the city, and, entering upon a new business, which proved very successful, was, in a few years, acknowledged by all to be a rich man.

Arthur heard of his uncle's good fortune, but with the same indifference that the other villagers heard of it, as he regarded it as a matter of course, that the wealth of "Green Peas" would never do him any good.

Although Arthur was, at this time, an orphan, he never dreamed that his uncle would so far forget the loss of a leg as to line the pockets of the youth who had caused its loss.

Yet, sometimes Arthur's regret for his [illegible] disinterested nature, especially when, on a pleasant afternoon in May, he stood upon a little knoll in the outskirts of the village, and looking across the creek, which flowed by its foot, he watched a clump of trees on the rising ground beyond and got a glimpse of a snow-white dress partly hidden by the early spring verdure as it flitted by the open windows of a neat, pink-colored cottage which was shaded by the foliage.

There, indeed, dwelt Lucinda W——, a very pretty girl, who had recently fallen heir to one thousand dollars. So much the worse for Arthur, who had previously evinced a fancy for Lucinda, while his attentions to the young lady had not been so marked as to give him a claim to urge his suit now without, as he imagined, rendering him liable to the suspicion of loving the thousand dollars more than he loved their owner.

But such a suspicion would have been very unjust to Arthur, who really loved Lucinda with his whole heart, and his passion was fully returned by the young lady, although she was woman enough to veil that secret closely until the youth should declare his love to her.

And now it was that Lucinda had some misgivings about the young man's intentions, since he seemed to have been less assiduous of late than he had formerly been. The true reason never occurred to her. She had always heard that men had no objection to come into the possession of money, even if it was found to be in the hands of the woman they took for better or for worse.

While Arthur thus hesitated, and Lucinda thus doubted, the tidings were brought to the village that the uncle, "Green Peas," was attacked with the dropsy and could live but a few weeks longer, and it was privately communicated to Arthur that his uncle would leave him a handsome legacy; and, finally, the lawyer who had drawn up the uncle's will made known this fact not only to Arthur, but to the whole village also.

Arthur felt no more scruples about urging his suit to Lucinda, but while he was cogitating in his mind how he could best open his mind to her he received a visit from the village schoolmaster.—The youth was not surprised at that, for, ever since his good fortune had become publicly known, many persons who had previously passed him without deigning to honor him with a nod, had suddenly discovered that he was a lad of excellent promise and had shown a disposition to cultivate his acquaintance.

Therefore, although the schoolmaster was a very proud and important young gentleman, whose father was a minister, Arthur regarded his visit as no more than what might have been naturally expected.

The schoolmaster, however, did not so far forget his own dignity as to hide the fact from Arthur that he had called for the purpose of offering him a little good advice.

"I have heard of the change in your prospects," said the tutor.

"So I supposed," answered the youth, without in the least perceiving the sarcasm contained in his words.

"You must be sensible," continued the man of learning, "that common prudence sometimes requires a change in our plans when there has been a change in our condition."

"I suppose there is something in that," replied Arthur, much wondering what his visitor was driving at.

"One should have an eye to his position in society and the credit of his family."

"Certainly," said Arthur.

"Just so. I am glad to find that you are sensible of it. Let me tell you, in confidence, that Miss Angusta F——, daughter of Mr. F——, who owns the factory and much other property, has spoken of you as a young man of fine talents."

"Of me?" cried Arthur. "I had not supposed that she knew anything about me."

"Oh, yes. Her father, of course, knew all about your uncle, and that naturally led to conversation about you, and as you are his only relative now living, much speculation arose as to whether your uncle would not do the handsome thing by you, and it appears that he has not forgotten you. Now, under such circumstances, you ought not to throw yourself away upon any commonplace girl in the village. You should look ahead, and not give way to the passing fancy of inexperienced boyhood. Think of allying yourself with one of our first families."

"I understand you perfectly well," returned Arthur; "but you speak as if I was the only young man who had the prospect of receiving a legacy, and that, therefore, I could with confidence pay my addresses to Miss Augusta F—. There are plenty of young men who move in the same circles with Miss F—, and it is probable that she would prefer one who had always belonged to the higher class of society to a parvenu like myself, who has not yet received the promised legacy from his uncle."

"That is good reasoning for ordinary cases," answered the schoolmaster; "but I happen to know that Miss Augusta is capable of making a choice, and that she has set her cap for you in particular. Think of it, my good fellow, or you may repent when regrets will be too late for remedy. Unequal marriages are very seldom happy ones. No doubt that the first Napoleon loved Josephine and admired her as 'grace personified,' but after he became emperor the daughter of a plasterer was exchanged for the daughter of a monarch."

"You forget that Napoleon wanted an heir."

"No, not quite," said the tutor, with a smile; "but you see that, although he wanted an heir, he did not take another low-born woman for his second wife."

The schoolmaster took his departure, and as our youth watched him from the window he said to himself: "What's up now? How did this man know that I had a fancy for Lucinda, and why does he want that I should leave her and pay my court to Augusta F—? But I forget that I have no parents to advise me; and, as I was once a pupil of this schoolmaster, he would offer himself as a substitute for my poor father and mother, who sleep in yonder graveyard."

Already had the promptings of ambition brought a flush to the cheek of Arthur. He had been told that the proud and somewhat supercilious Augusta had spoken well of him, and now that he was no longer poor, what could prevent him from succeeding with Augusta?

The lad did not feel altogether happy at the idea of exchanging Lucinda for Augusta; but, if anything can conquer love, it is ambition; and, to aspire to the hand of a young lady whom he had formerly scarcely dared to look at, seemed to him almost like entering a new world, and commencing a career in a higher order of beings than ever inhabited this dusty globe.

Now, Arthur did not actually want his uncle to die; but he did want to receive that legacy, as he imagined that having once made sure of that, it would heal the perturbations of his heart and set his mind at rest.

But, Augusta F——did not wait for the arrival of the legacy. Meeting him on the street one day she looked at him and smiled very sweetly. Arthur bowed in return, and, from that moment he felt the binding of the silken chain.—Yes, it was not in his power to forget that look of hers which tallied so well with what the schoolmaster had told him. No doubt Augusta was pleased with him, or she never would have thus honored him with a smile even before he had spoken to her.

A few days afterward there was a party at the great house, and Arthur received a note containing a polite invitation, signed by the fair hand of Augusta herself.

Who could remember the humble Lucinda after that? But Lucinda remembered Arthur, and was somewhat saddened by his long absence; yet it was without a pang of jealousy that she heard her young friends talk of the party at the great house, of the songs that were sung, the games that were played, and that Arthur had danced with Augusta, who seemed to be highly delighted by his intentions.

Indeed, such words had passed between Augusta and Arthur that the latter had felt himself at perfect liberty to call upon the young lady at any convenient time. Why do? There was no engagement between him and Lucinda. He had not even told her that he loved her. It is true that Lucinda had imagined that she felt that he loved her. She now began to fear that she had been mistaken. She was very unhappy. Can any of our readers tell why?

Arthur became a frequent visitor at the great house, and was always well received, until Augusta gave him a hint, which scarcely amounted to a hint, however, that if he declared himself, the declaration would be well received.—Arthur blushed up to his eyes with delight and trepidation.

He made up his mind to pop the question at the next visit. The eventful evening came. Arthur had dressed himself and arranged his hair and whiskers in the best style, when he heard a loud rap on the front door. He hastened to open the door, and there he saw a horse and a light wagon.

"Does Mr. Arthur Pease live here?" demanded the driver of the wagon.

"Yes, that is my name," answered the youth.

"Well, I have something here from Mr. Joshua Pease—your uncle, I suppose."

Having said these words the man went back to his wagon, and taking a long mahogany box from it, brought the box to Arthur and laid it at his feet. He then bade the youth adieu, sprang upon the seat of his wagon and drove off without another word. Arthur thought this was rather a cavalier manner of dealing with a box containing a large amount of money. He took the box into the house, and having opened it with a hammer and chisel, he found that it contained an old wooden leg with a card nailed to it, on which were the following words:

THIS LEGACY
is for my dutiful and beloved nephew,
Arthur Pease. JOSHUA PEASE.

For a moment Arthur was stunned, as if he had received a violent blow on his skull which had paralyzed his brain. Then the room seemed to be turning round. What did the lawyer mean by telling him that his uncle had left him a large sum of money in his will? Ah! that was doubtless a part of the plot, in order that his disappointment might be the more complete!

It was evident enough that the eccentric and whimsical old gentleman had taken this method to punish his nephew for depriving him of a leg. This old timber leg in the box was the long-expected leg-acy!

For some minutes Arthur felt himself crushed to the very earth. How his friends, who had envied his good fortune, would triumph now. He almost imagined that he already heard the serpent-hiss of his enemies.

At length he began to recover from his despair. Augusta had certainly seemed to love him; her father had money enough for them both, and so tenderly had the young lady bidden him adieu that the thought struck him that his very misfortune and disappointment might increase her love for him by exciting her pity.

"I will not despair," cried he, "for this event may hasten instead of deferring our union."

He set out for the great house quite early in the evening. He rang the bell and a servant appeared. He inquired for Augusta, who was in. He sent up his name, and the servant very soon returned, saying: "Miss Augusta is sorry to say that she has an engagemet which will prevent her from seeing Mr. Pease this evening."

The servant, at the same time, stared in Arthur's face with a saucy grin on his own countenance, and as he slammed the door in the youth's face the latter overheard him saying to somebody in the vestibule: "Did Sam Harris tell you 'bout that wooden leg in the box? Guess Miss Augusta heard all about it. Mind my words, Mr. Pease has got de mitten for sartain."

Arthur did not yet despair; but when he went on the next evening and received the same answer he knew that the tidings of his uncle's singular legacy had overcome the love of Augusta F——. It was evidently not himself but the legacy with which Augusta had fallen in love. She had, in common with others, imagined that it was a hundred thousand dollars instead of a wooden leg that Arthur was to come into possession of.

Arthur felt that he was well punished [illegible] age, played upon his uncle. The wooden leg in the box was a sad reminder. That evening, after his return from the great house, was the saddest of his life. But, just before nine o'clock, Arthur heard a gentle rap at his outer door.—He opened it, and found there a poorly dressed girl who handed him a letter.

From whom could the letter have come? Had he still a friend?

Arthur opened the letter. It read as follows:

"DEAR FRIEND: I have heard of your misfortune. It is little that I can do to remedy it, but the enclosed check for $1,000 may relieve you from any present distress. I beg that you will have no scruple about accepting it. I am sure you that I can do without it. I have an aunt living in Montpelier who is old and infirm, and she requests me to come and live with her. I shall wait upon her, and she is able to supply all my wants.

"I shall be very unhappy if you do not accept this money. It is, indeed, but little in comparison with what you had a right to expect; yet, it is better than nothing. I had hoped, at one time, that you and I would share this little sum together, but I ought to have known that you could never bring your mind to live with one of my condition. I start for Montpelier to-morrow. Farewell.

"LUCINDA W——."

In penning the last few words Arthur could perceive that Lucinda's hand had trembled.

He could not doubt that the poor girl really loved him; but how could he renew his attentions to her after having shown his preference for Augusta? How could he say to her, in acts if not in words: "As Augusta has discarded me I come back to you?"

One thing he was fully resolved upon; he would not receive the thousand dollars of Lucinda, and, without a minute's reflection, he tore the check into fragments and threw them into the fire.

Lucinda did not go to Montpelier on the next morning as she intended, for she wanted to make sure that Arthur had taken out the money from the bank. On learning from the cashier that her check had not been presented, she could think of no recourse, but to obtain an interview with Arthur, and beg him to accept the thousand dollars, fondly supposing that, after a full explanation of her prospects she could prevail on him to accept the money.

Lucinda called at Arthur's house. As soon as he saw her all his former love returned, inflamed by this recent proof of her generosity and disinterestedness. He clasped her in his arms, called her an angel, and a great many other fine things too numerous to mention.

It was soon settled that Lucinda, instead of going to live with her aunt in Montpelier, should commence housekeeping with Arthur in the village.

On the ensuing week Arthur and Lucinda were married.

While the happy couple were making the best use of their thousand dollars in furnishing a small tenement, a portly and elderly man, on a stout black horse, rode up to their door and dismounted.

On entering the humble dwelling the old gentleman looked rather quizzingly around upon the modest paraphernalia of the apartment, and then announced himself as the executor of Arthur's uncle.

"You received the wooden leg, I suppose?" said the stranger, laughing heartily.

Arthur could have told him that it was no laughing matter; but he simply nodded his head, and looked grave.

"Your uncle had his own peculiarities," continued the executor. "He determined to punish you for the follies of your early life, and, therefore, after having led you to believe that he was going to leave you a large sum of money, he disappointed you by sending an old wooden leg instead of a hundred thousand dollars."

"But," said Lucinda, "was it altogether right to raise a false report by pretending that he was going to leave his nephew all that money when he had no such intention?"

"You are wrong there," replied the gentleman. "Mr. Joshua Pease was no liar. He spoke the simple truth."

Both Arthur and Lucinda stared, and seemed to be much puzzled by these words of the executor.

"Where is the wooden leg?" demanded the latter.

Arthur produced the timber leg. The old gentleman took a small key from his pocket and inserted it in a small orifice in the bottom of the foot. He then turned the key, the leg flew open, disclosing two separate halves, where a roll of paper dropped to the floor, the paper having been confined in the center of the wooden leg.

The executor picked up the paper and handed it to Arthur. "Read!" said he.

Arthur took the paper, opened it, and saw that it was his uncle's will, and that his uncle had really left him a legacy of a hundred thousand dollars. Thus, it appeared that his uncle had contrived to punish Arthur and tell the truth about leaving him a portion of his wealth at the same time.

"Truly," said Arthur, "it may be said of this old wooden leg that it was sent to me 'a blessing in disguise.'"

Arthur and Lucinda never repented their marriage. They lived together many years, rich and prosperous, and blessed with a family of healthy and beautiful children. Several of their descendants still inhabit our village, and they take pleasure in listening to the anecdotes about the oddities and droll adventures of their ancestor, "Green Peas," as related by a very old lady named Myrick, who says that she might have married him if she had given her consent. But some think that part of her story is somewhat apocryphal.

Ages of Animals.

Camels live from 40 to 50 years; horses average from 25 to 30; oxen, about 20; sheep, 8 to 9, and dogs, 12 to 14. Concerning the ages attained by non-domesticated animals, only a few isolated facts are known. The East Indians believe that the life period of elephants is about 300 years, instances being recorded of these animals having lived 150 years in confinement after capture at an unknown age. Whales are estimated to reach the age of 400 years. Some pikes are long-lived, an instance being furnished by a tortoise which was confined in 1633 and existed until 1758 when it perished by an accident. Birds sometimes reach a great age, the eagle and the swan having been known to live 100 years. The longevity of fishes is often remarkable. The carp has been known to live 200 years, common river trout, 50 years, and the pike 90 years, while Gesner, a Swiss naturalist, relates that a pike caught in 1497 bore a ring recording the capture of the same fish 267 years before. Insects are very short-lived, usually completing the term of their existence in a few weeks or months. Some even perish within a few hours after emerging from the grub state, and die on the very day of entering upon their new life. As a general rule, not to be applied too closely, larger types of animals live longer than smaller.

Raining Trees.

At the Cape of Good Hope, near Table Mountain, the clouds come down very low now and then without dropping in rain. At such a time, if a traveller should go under a tree for shelter from the threatening storm, he would find himself in a drenching shower, while out in the open, away from any tree or shrub, everything would be as dry as a bone! The cloud or mist is rather warmer than the leaves, you see, and so, when it touches them, it changes into clinging drops, which look like dew. Fresh drops keep forming; they run together, and, at length, the water drips off the leaves like rain. And this process goes on until the clouds lift and the sun comes out again.

Mr. Whittier on Annoyance in Heaven.

Mrs. Ellen E. Dickinson, in the Churchman: I related something of a conversation between Mr. Longfellow and myself on spiritualism a few months before his death, or, rather, a conversation on the influence and nearness which many persons experience in regard to those who were dear to them and have gone into the mysteries of eternity. Mr. Whittier listened with interest, adding that he was aware that Mr. Longfellow had some remarkable ideas and sympathies of the kind, but had never talked with him on the subject, "and for myself," he added, "I have felt but very slightly that closeness and nearness of the unseen of which you speak." After a few moments, in the progress of our talk, he remarked: "Life is a mystery, death is a mystery. I am like the Chinese philosopher Confucius, who, when he was asked, 'What is death?' answered, 'Life is such a mystery that I do not seek to penetrate what is beyond it.'" "May I ask if you believe in the progress of the soul after that?" "Why not? Surely we are not to be placed in niches to remain forever. We shall doubtless there have what we lack here, harmony, and that is my idea of heaven." "No troubles, no vexations?" "Well, I do not think so. It seems to me we must, there, as well as here, have some annoyance, to be quite content, in contrast." This was a novel idea, and I laughed in appreciation of it, and said: "Then you do not fancy a supreme satisfaction and content." "No, no, not I," laughing merrily. "But we meet people who are thoroughly delighted with themselves and their surroundings very frequently." "True, and thee hast seen clams at high tide; they remind me of such people. Ah! we shall have some trials in the life beyond (and here the poet's fine dark eyes lighted up with a rare intelligence), but our happiness will be all the sweeter, and everything will be harmonized."

Swindling Farmers.

The reports of farmers being swindled by traveling sharpers are less numerous than they were a few years ago. Farmers are not as anxious as they were of becoming agents for the sale of useless implements, or to purchase patent rights. They are more careful about signing orders for lightning-rods and advancing money for goods to be delivered in the future. In brief, they are becoming more intelligent in all business matters. Cases of swindling are occasionally reported, but when they are it is evident that the sharpers have been obliged to resort to some new dodge in order to insure success. A new swindle, according to local reports, has been perpetrated in several places in Iowa, during the past month. It requires two persons to manage it successfully. They watch the papers for notices of estrays. One goes to look at a horse or cow, and soon decides that it is not the one he has lost. During his visit he carefully notices the size, color, and peculiar marks on the animal, and forms a pretty accurate opinion in regard to its weight and age. He reports all these matters to his "partner," who, in a few days, pays a visit to the farm where the animal was taken up. He is able to give so full and accurate a description of the "lost" animal that the person in [illegible] in offering to give it up. The pretended owner, however, finds it inconvenient to take it home, and offers to sell it at a low price. The farmer accepts the proposition to sell, and pays over the money. In the course of a few days the rightful owner comes along and claims the animal, and produces evidence that it is his. The residence of the seller cannot be ascertained, and, of course, the buyer is out the money he has paid.

How Spiders Seek the Light.

At the last meeting of the Academy of Natural Sciences the Rev. Dr. Henry C. McCook reported the results of experiments recently made by him on the subject of the sensitiveness of spiders on light. The brood of young spiders which he had for some time been studying in his library were found to dispose themselves during the day on lines of web upon which the light from a window fell with the most effect. On the approach of evening, when the study lamp was lit, they moved in a body toward its beams, and when the position of the lamp was changed it immediately produced a corresponding change of resting place in the brood. During his studies of the winter habits of spiders he had recently found adult specimens of Epeira vulgaris at Atlantic City which had evidently survived the winter. Although the season had advanced somewhat, there seemed to be very few young, which might be due to the fact that they had been eaten either by the old spiders or the stronger young ones, as there seemed to be but a scant supply of insect food in the vicinity of the webs. He mentioned in this connection that, although the spiders in his study had been supplied with water only since their escape from the cocoons, he had not detected among them the slightest disposition to eat one another. Prof. Lewis stated that a sclitigrade spider confined by him in a glass tube was evidently able to distinguish the waving of a handkerchief at a distance of six feet. In connection with the reported cannibal habits of spiders, the president stated that the common wheel or saw-hug, Reduvius novenarius, certainly eats his young. The president also described colonies of white aphis and red coccus kept separately as captive herds by a species of little red ant of the genus lasius.—Philadelphia North American.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by all druggists.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

One Experience from Many.

I had been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

Back Ache

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies.

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 6000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

KING OF THE BLOOD.

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the Stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

ITS NAME IS ITS BEST DESCRIPTION as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.
It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.
It cures DROPSY, general or partial.
It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.
It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.
It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons, and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 40 to 50 doses. Sold by dealers in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you, as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

Many persons who envy their neighbors because they are making more money than themselves, forget that generally those who get the largest salaries have their expenses increased in proportion, and therefore often cannot save as much as when they were living on a smaller salary.

An actor, just in, was descanting upon the hardships of the combination system, particularly to married people. Said he: "I have seen my wife just once this season, and then at a railroad junction. She was leaning on the arm of her manager, and I was carrying the traps of our soubrette."

Reliable statistics prove that only one of every fifteen American girls who go abroad to become great singers are ever heard of afterward. The fourteen others marry Italian counts and are kept too busy mending tambourines and tending the monkeys to keep up their home relations.

Some German newspapers are venerable with age. The Frankfort Journal is 261 years old, the Magdeburg Zeitung is 253 years old, and ninety-eight others are over 100 years old, and most of these papers are no more like a real live American sheet than they were 100 years ago.

One hundred years ago small-pox was spreading its terrors through Europe, and Madame Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI., offered her fair arm for inoculation, to convince the people of its virtue. The people manifested their gratitude a few years later by chopping off her head.

The census of agriculture will show that there are [illegible] farms in Texas and 287,000,000 acres of improved land. The value of the farms amounts to $90,197,161,000, or five times the national debt; value of farm animals, $1,500,000,000. There are 19,357,000 houses in the country, or one to every five human beings.

Professor Gussenbauer, of Prague, over a year ago removed the larynx and epiglottis of a patient suffering from cancerous larynx, and supplied an artificial larynx and vocal cords. The patient is a riding teacher, the best in Prague, and is busy continually. He suffers neither inconvenience nor pain. His speech is perfectly intelligible, and he eats and drinks with facility. This is the best living example of what the art of the surgeon and mechanician can do for such a terrible disease as cancer of the larynx.

Professor Huxley will contribute to Nature a notice of his deceased friend Darwin, whom he compares to Socrates, saying there was in him "the same desire to find some one wiser than himself, the same belief in the sovereignty of reason, the same ready humor, the same sympathetic interest in all the ways and works of men."

There were 390 stones in Disraeli's Star of the Garter, and his executors have had them removed from their setting, remounted in rings, with an Earl's coronet and the word "Beaconsfield" engraved on the inside of each ring, and have offered them for sale to those admirers of the Premier who are willing to pay something handsome for mementoes.

The Bishop of Limerick being in failing health, his physician recently told him it would be necessary for him to seek rest and change of air at Nice. The Bishop positively declined to do so. Then said the doctor, plainly: "My Lord, I tell you candidly that your case is a most serious one; and if you do not go to Nice, you must very soon go to Heaven." "Oh, well, in that case," replied the Bishop, dismally, "I will go to Nice."

A poor sewing girl who went to the late Dr. John F. Gray for advice, was given a phial of medicine and told to go home and go to bed. "I can't do that, doctor," the girl replied, "for I am dependent on what I earn every day for my living." "If that is so," said Dr. Gray, "I'll change the medicine a little. Give me back the phial." He then wrapped around it a $10 bill, and returning it to her, reiterated his order, "Go home and go to bed," adding, "Take the medicine, cover and all."

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

A Trick About an Oil Well.

A few days before the Murphy well commenced to put forth grease, the rig and engine-house at the Murphy well were burned to the ground. None but interested parties were at the well at the time, and reports were sent out by them that the fire originated in an explosion of gas, says an Oil City Correspondent to the Philadelphia Press. The story was generally credited at the time, but a story has since been circulated to the following effect: Drilling at the Murphy well proceeded rapidly, and before the owner was prepared for it his drill had touched "the jugular vein," as the oil men call it, and the fact was speedily made known from below. Oil flowed suddenly and freely, and the derrick, engine-house, and the adjoining bushes were well sprinkled with the greasy fluid. It was not according to Capt. Murphy's idea that the outer world should as yet be made aware that he had a big well. The oil men would soon be flocking to the vicinity, and if traces of the oil (and traces were large and pronounced) were seen about the rig and grounds the four winds of heaven, leaving the Western Union Telegraph and reporters out of the question, would soon spread the tidings to the four quarters of the earth.

To avoid this, orders were issued to set fire to the scattered oil, and ere long the derrick, engine-house, and all traces of the oil which had been scattered about were licked up by the flames. Then the story of the gas explosion was circulated.

It seems to be a generally conceded fact among oil men that when there is much gas there is little oil, and so as the story circulated and was spread by the newspapers, the general verdict was rendered, "The Murphy well isn't good for anything." But Capt. Murphy knew better, and as the price of oil stiffened a little he sold short, and when 646, and later Murphy, broke the market, he covered the shorts and reaped a rich harvest.

"He was the most perfect gentleman I ever saw," said a Kentuckian of Henry Clay. "When you went to see him he handed you the whisky-bottle and then turned his back."

COMMENCEMENT ESSAYS.

THE CONCLUSION OF OUR REPORT OF THE GRADUATING EXERCISES.

We present herewith the four commencement essays which were necessarily omitted in our last weeks' report. After perusing them we think our readers will agree with us in the assertion that the space allotted to them has been devoted to an excellent purpose. One must acknowledge that the list as a whole is much better, both in finish and originality, than the general run of graduating essays. The young ladies of '82 have acquitted themselves nobly and will take a position among the best of our High School graduating classes.

"Wait a Minute."

ELIDA D. JAMES.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—If you can wait a minute we'll criticise the assertion made by Young that "Procrastination is the thief of time." Undoubtedly, at first thought, you will conclude that this bold attempt results from conceit, but should this be your conclusion we hope to prove its falsity by convincing you of the fact that we are no common class, but that we are one apt to criticise and pass acts of reformation upon our predecessors.

Most writers preceding us have wounded the pride of this great subject, "Wait a Minute," by accepting it wholly in its negative sense, viz., as procrastination. They claim that this habit of putting off duties, when once formed grows upon us, and that each to-day is generously supplied with its own duties and cares, without being burdened with those of yesterday. This, perhaps, is all very well in poetry, but in life, which is at best blank verse, and pretty blank too sometimes, it is not always substantiated. The first thing one naturally considers is his own convenience—so, as far as this alone is concerned how much pleasanter it is to "Wait a Minute" before doing anything, if one always feel obliged to be on hand, to always attend to things at just such a moment, to feel that one's reputation is at stake if a moment is lost. How unprofitable to have one's mind in the same channel seeking the same object. One would think, that this course would result in such a stereotyped habit that it would cause one to become methodical and over precise in all things; and to be in company with such "stiff" persons, as we are wont to call them, produces a strangely uneasy feeling to any of us who are inclined to take things as they come.

Imagine, if possible, the whole world working by rule; everyone doing his respective duties at their proper time, what a sing-song time we would have of it. The mere thought of the effect produced by such painful order is enough to sustain our idea of waiting a minute. Even nature herself, who is looked up to as a mother, is on our side. Think how she keeps us waiting for rain till everything is parched and dead. Then how abundantly she supplies us with the article, and keeps us waiting for sunshine till we are damp and soaked clear through and mill-dewed. How she puts off winter until spring; how she keeps our house-cleaning under foot till the month of July, waiting for warm weather. If we are not to follow the examples of nature, who has been lauded by bards from the earliest ages, whom are we to study and follow?

How often we see people with so much business on hand that they cannot see "where to begin." They push along as fast as possible, studying to make every move count and using up more time in wondering how to save steps and minutes than it would take to accomplish the piece of work before them. Everything is thrown together and done the quickest way, and as a consequence half of it has to be done over the next day, simply because they were in too much of a hurry.—Give a cool, reserved person, the same tasks to do he'll wait a minute before commencing, then take his time, do one thing, and finish it, thinking if the work is not completed to-day he will have time to-morrow. Even if he doesn't seem to do as much he is really ahead of the lightning-speed disposition, for nothing which has been done needs to be done over again. Thus, "Haste makes waste," is quite as true as "Procrastination is the thief of time."

Compare Dryden with Pope. Dryden's compositions were hasty. He never attempted to make that better which was already good—writing with very little consideration and publishing without correction. Pope on the contrary was not content merely to satisfy the public mind; he desired to excel, endeavoring to do his best, which can be done only by taking time. Our bodies have been compared, many times, to machinery, and what is true of one may be applied to the other. Machinery, which is used day after day and not oiled and properly taken care of because time is too precious to lose, soon wears out by constant friction, and it is just so with the body or mind that is always rushed, and never supplied with rest or recreation; it soon wears out with constant worry.

This, it is said, is a fast age. As compared with Oriental nations, we hurry ourselves out of existence. No time is taken for the things necessary to life, and as a result, the body, in what should be the prime of life, is thread-bare, whereas it might have lasted comparatively strong three score years and ten. "What ripens fast does not last," or "Soon ripe, soon rotten," We have not been seeking to depreciate work, or plenty of it, but to find the easiest and best way of doing it, and since "Of two evils choose the least," we accept as one of our mottoes, "Wait a minute."

Blackberries are Green when Red.

JENNIE NELANS.

This seems to be a contradiction of terms. Black, green, and red, how can the berries have all these properties at once? Blackberries are of a black color when ripe, and for this reason were called blackberries.—Green does not apply to the color but to the state of the berry as unripe, not having reached a state of full maturity. When the berry first appears it is green, then becomes tinged with yellow, afterwards red, and finally black, and not until it is black is it ripe.—When the berries are red they might be supposed to be ripe, as are strawberries, red raspberries, and red currants, but they are wholly unfit to eat.

The expression is true. Nature is one of the best of teachers; she here has a lesson. Appearances are often deceptive. We have so drifted into the habit of judging by appearances that we form our opinions almost at first sight. But the exterior does not always act as a mirror reflecting the thoughts, feelings, and intuition.—Probably each and every one can bring to mind some person whose features and expressions seem but the reflection of a good disposition and a kind heart, but upon further acquaintance finds that the countenance is not an index to the character. The rough exterior of a Johnson may hide a great kind heart. One of the most important books is the book of nature, and of the most interesting chapters the study of the human countenance and its relation to character. The berry when in the state of half maturity bids fair. When plucked it sticks a little to the bush and not until it has been partaken of and begins to effect the taste do we ascertain the falsity of the appearance. Thus with vices and those frivolous amusements which are the temptations of the young. The vices, like the berry, are dressed in gaudy plumage. Bad literature, intoxicating liquors, tobacco, card playing, dancing, idleness, and luxury, are all delusive pleasures turning to hollow mockery. It may be very pleasant to have an occasional game of cards. Then to add to the amusement give a little to the winner.—Nearer and nearer it approaches gambling until the lowest depths are reached. Through similar steps each vice proceeds. Each has a fair beginning. What one has not? Deceit is luring all classes to ruin.

Our faith in humanity is sometimes shaken because of the deceitfulness of appearances. Just as the individual is deceived so are the classes, and as the classes so the nation. What caused the downfall of Rome? The charing, and in many respects cruel. It also had some noble virtues, it was of heroic mold. At first their genius appeared in the art of governing mankind, it was their valor, their probity, their patriotism, their political tact that distinguished them. The Romans, at first, were plain both in manners of dress and diet. When Rome had all nations at her feet riches poured in upon her inhabitants. But even in the sunburst of her glory the gems of decay were ripening. Through contact with other nations they learned a great deal that was debasing. They became lavish, luxurious, and corrupt in morals. The old Roman faith waned. Then the political system was in a state of public corruption; her citizens were selling their votes. Thus step by step one of the greatest nations, through a gradual decay, was swallowed up by the world which it had conquered.

We, although yet a young nation, have many vices. Our politics are becoming polluted. Many who hold important offices, instead of doing what is right and best, follow slavishly the opinion of their party. The uses of tobacco in its many forms, and of intoxicating spirits is dwarfing the minds and bodies of many a young person. The children get tired of school and stop; some not over a dozen years old. What can they do? They, at first, may be able to pick up an errand here and there, but half their time is spent in idleness. It is much more pleasant for them to do nothing than to do odd jobs, and they soon cease to work. Already the seed of idleness is beginning to grow, and by the time manhood is reached will be like the sturdy oak. If during the time spent in idleness, the person had been at school learning habits of industry, and storing the mind with useful knowledge, he would never have cause of regret. Let me cite one more instance which is very common. Extravagance in dress. To be neat and decently clad is a duty, but too much time and money spent in adorning ourselves outwardly, and taking no time to beautify our life and character is a great wrong. We must look at the bright side as well as the dark.—But to remedy an evil we must meet it face to face.

There is need to tremble for the future of our country; though just beginning our second century as a nation, already the germs of decay have sprouted and taken deep root. As the berry ripens on the outside first and not in the center, so we, as a people, polish the outside by elegance of attire and manners, and neglect to cultivate the heart, forgetting that true culture and goodness springs from within. There is any amount of sham culture. It may for a time pass, but if weighed in the balance will be found wanting; whereas thorough culture makes perfection.

If we draw a comparison between our country, which is among the first if not the first nation in the world, and those nations which have reached the highest pinnacle of fame and then fallen, we find that the very vices which led to their decay and ruin infect the American nation. But since upon us, individually and collectively, depends the future prosperity and greatness of our country; let us work so earnestly for the promotion of truth and righteousness in its borders, and for the establishment of a high national character, that the time may never come when it can be truthfully said: The great Republic has fallen!

My Knight of the 19th Century.

ALLIE J. SATTERTHWAITE.

Friends, Tecumsehites and Countrymen:—"Lend me your ears." I'll return them before midnight. "Hear me for my cause, and be patient till the last."

In this matter of fact age, anything characterized as mysterious is discredited and ridiculed. Young America takes no stock in the supernatural.—The miracles of biblical lore and the fantastic tales of fairy land, whose subtle charm so completely fascinated him in days of yore are now, to him, myths of the past. Yet the other evening I had an adventure, which to you may seem highly improbable.—Nevertheless I will vouch for its truth, for no person could be less liable than myself to be led away from the severe precincts of truth by the ignis fatuus, superstition. I think best to remark this lest the incredible tale I have to tell should be considered the ravings of imagination rather than the positive experience of a mind to which the reveries of fancy have ever been a dead letter.

Listen.—Subrosa.—I've long been an ardent admirer of a certain distinguished personage; no ordinary lord of creation, be it known, but a soulful eyed knight of the 19th century, in high social standing, the peer of any monarch in the universe, and intellectually the rival of the most eminent master minds of the present age. A great traveler is this gentleman; in fact, everything of interest has he seen, every clime has he visited, not once only but times innumerable until his face is familiar to every man, woman and child on this colossal ball. However, he does not travel merely for pleasure but in pursuance of his profession, as he numbers one of that illustrious class of masculines known as commercial travelers, with this distinguishing feature, his territory embraces the world, he being sole agent for Heaven, Star & Co., wholesale dealers in serenades, picnics, love and taffy. Through him I've learned all your secrets, and satisfied my curiosity with regard to the ways that are dark and the tricks that are vain of this peculiar class. Yes, Solomon, with all his wisdom, becomes a mere nonentity when compared to this paragon of learning, who permit me to inform you, is no other than Herr Monei—more familiarly known as the man of the moon. And now for the adventure:

One evening, not long since, while taking a solitary ramble, bemoaning the trials and tribulations of a graduate, I became oblivious to all my surroundings as I strolled on, speculating as to who could have invented graduating exercises, the grand denouement of school life, and thinking how gladly I would postpone all other recreations to attend the inventor's funeral, when my attention was suddenly attracted to the fact that I was standing on the brow of a little hill, underfoot a thick carpeting of bronze-green, overhead the military blue heavens, flashing and sparkling with numberless un-born stars. [illegible] breath of air. A more perfect silence it is impossible to conceive. Everything lay in indistinct shadow. A feeling of awe crept over me which my soul could scarce resist. Abruptly the profound stillness was broken by a voice, apparently close beside me, which said, "Good evening, Fraulein." I turned and to my utter amazement beheld the smiling face of the man of the moon. Amazement but partially expresses the state of my feelings. Perhaps, for an instant, I was frightened, but only for an instant. I rose to the occasion, answering his salutation with all the nonchalance in the world, for to make no response would have been positively rude. Breathlessly I waited for him to speak. "A thousand pardons for my boldness," he began, "but I thought this spot to be a perfect acadia of seclusion, and on that account have stopped off here occasionally to catch a few moments rest, although mankind seem to be under the impression that I am wound up for eternity; that when I do desist it will be like my grandfather's clock, never to go again. How true are the words of the poet, 'Things are not what they seem.'" In the interim my fears had vanished into thin air. Now is the golden opportunity, I thought, for a five minutes interview with my interlocutor, posted as he must be on all the topics of the day, would be worth an hour with an other public character. So I mustered up my curiosity and inquired, "Sir, do you tire of the monotonous life you lead, such an eternal repetition, night in, night out?" "Tire, why bless you, no.—There is no study so fascinating as the study of human nature. I have the advantage of you there. From my exalted position nothing escapes me. I look down upon the roofs beneath me. Think how various are the situations of the people covered by them, how diversified are the events at this moment befalling them. The innocent child, conceited youth, the gray-headed old man. All stages from the cradle to the grave,—the new born, the dying, are in these many chambers.—The contented, happy, miserable, desperate, all dwell within my view.—Even in your little city, I have seen sights, have secrets in my keeping, which, did you but know them, would thrill you with horror. How then can I tire when this panorama of real life is constantly passing before my eyes."

Well, I had not thought of it in that light, I answered. Surely no life could be further removed from the monotonous than your own. But, now that I think of it, tell me, what is your opinion of estheticism.

"If by estheticism you mean to designate those creatures, who, dressed in all the colors of the rainbow, rave over my amber complexion, enthuse at the soulful moonbeams, call me too utterly beyond, if this be estheticism, I am thankful to say that I am too utterly beyond appreciating anything of the kind. At first I was in a quandery as to whether these so-called Esthetics were escaped lunatics or amateur-professionals studying for the stage. At all events they surpass anything I have ever seen in that line since the beginning."

Why, you must have been an eye witness to the various love scenes enacted here—all grades, from high tragedy to low comedy.

"Most assuredly. Moonlight nights were invented for the express benefit of Cupid and his devoted followers.—The origin of love in all its moods and intenses is referable to the infancy of the human race. In all probability the first love-sick swain was our most revered fore-pa Adam. At all events we can trace the science back to a remote period of antiquity. Love is the only article in the fashionable market that has maintained its par value down the long vista of years,—always rather dear, yet never out of date. The moderns, however, have brought it to a degree of perfection never dreamed of by our thick-headed progenitors. For instance, the hypothesis 'love at first sight' is now adopted, though it may be well to add that a second glance will never be regretted. The love professional of the period, convinced that time is money, crowds the opening act, the intervening scenes delineating the tropical growth of the sensitive plant love, and so to the grand finale into a fortnight at the most, giving, if successful, a good three days' start on the wedding tour. Should comedy characterize the play, the partnership or flirtation is dissolved by mutual consent. But if tragedy be the result, at least one of the parties most deeply interested commits suicide as the most novel method of shuffling off this mortal coil. Ah, well,

"A curious thing is love,
It cometh from above,
And falleth like a dove
On some;
On some it never hits
Unless it gives them fits."

Oh, my; I must bid you farewell.—But before I go you may ask me one question, concerning what you will, be it past or present, I will answer it."

I hesitated but a moment. Since all secrets are in your keeping, tell me, sir, where is Tom Navin?

"Tom Navin; why, at present he roams at large in the old world. His latest act was to mortgage the Mediterranean water bonds, you know, to the Czar of Russia for a recommendation of character, which he thinks will aid him in obtaining a situation in the salt mines of Siberia. Again farewell."

He sailed majestically upward,—slowly but surely assuming his usual appearance, and when he had reached his orbit he looked down upon me, smiling still, but oh so differently, that it seemed impossible I could have been chatting with him so familiarly but a moment before; and as I cast one last, long, lingering glance upon my Knight, the lines of Longfellow came involuntarily into my mind:

"Forever and forever,
As long as the river flows,
As long as the heart has passions,
As long as life has woes,
The moon and its broken reflection
And its shadows shall appear,
As the symbol of love in heaven,
And its wavering image here."

Samantha Allen's Sister on Whitewash.

FLORENCE E. SHEPARD.

PREFACE.

Yesterday as Samantha and I was washin' the dishes, and talkin' about Housecleanin', says to Samantha, "Samantha," says I, "I am goin' to write an essay on Whitewash for the Jonesville Augur." "Whitewash," says she wonderingly, "what do you want to write about whitewash for? aint you satisfied with Sam Dewey's whitewashin'?" "Samantha," says I, wavin' the dish towel majestically, "there's more than one kind of whitewash. Oh," says I warmin' with the subject, "when I think of what the world has suffered from whitewash since that old sarpent whitewashed Eve in the Garden of Eden, by his wise demeanor, until last week, when Mary Ann Spencer's husband sold me a half-cotton dress for all wool, Oh, when I think how the different forms of whitewash have been used until really 'things are not what they seem,' and even the dictionary and almanac we begin to doubt, I feel conspired to let Jonesville and the world know my feelin's on the subject." So, layin' aside the dish towel, I picked up my pen and writ the followin' essay for the "Jonesville Augur."

WHITEWASH.

This world is a world of whitewash. Our friends and our foes cover up their real selves by a whitewash of appearance. Even the sights and workin's of nater are but show, the real substance bein' forces too invisible for mortal eyes, too intangible and high for mortal intellect.

As I stood on the suspension bridge of Niagara, watchin' with wonder and awe that mighty flood as it came a roarin' down, a shakin' the earth till I trembled, hefty as I be, deep and unfathomable thoughts came risin' into my mind. All that grand display, that wondrous majesty, power and beauty was but the visible show of the forces of gravitation and cohesion. The invisible force must exist before the visible fact.

But this kind of whitewash, meanin' jest the outward appearance of things, is far different from the whitewash which people spread over their lives. The one comes from the nater of things and the law that every force must have its visible phenomena; the other comes from the hypocrisy and meanness of the human soul. Good land! some folks seem to think if they can cover up their ignorance, wickedness, or any other unpleasant circumstance, by a thin palaver of talk, that no one will ever discover the sham. But if folks are not what they pretend to be, all the fancy kalsominin' with frescoed border, wont hide the poor black rough plaster always. It will peel off some time. But its amazin' sometimes to see how thin the whitewash is put on, especially when folks ape gentility. Miss Gush of Jonesville stopped here to dinner last week, and her talk most drove me crazy. The fried sausage was a poem, the punkin-pie a nocturne, and the doughnuts a superlative symphony, whatever that is. In fact everything on the farm was "quite too consummately and utterly beyond." How consummately and utterly beyond all common sense such nonsense is.

Not long ago Samantha and I drove over to Hiram Smith's to stay to dinner. The front door bein' open we heard Jane say: "Here comes those horrid old women; wonder how long they have got to stay." But when they came to the door, they fell on our necks and begged us to stay a week or a month. "Yeth," says Lizzie, the youngest daughter, "sthay all thummer, pleathe do!" Then I noticed somethin' on my shoulder, an' pickin' it up, "what can it be?" says I, "Oh," says Lizzie, "themth my variety worith.'

They borrowed cake and silver and a hired girl for supper, for Tommy Smith said so at the table. The same foolish strivin' for gentility makes people try to keep up appearances they can't afford, and worse than that, cultivates a feelin' of arrogant pride among us poor wanderers through life's forest. The servant girl in her cotton velvet sham skirt looks most as stylish as her mistress. The poor young clerk smokes a sickening 5-cent cigar because his employer smokes a Havana. He must dress and dance and treat like his employer's son. The well-to-do try to keep up appearances with the better-to-do, who in their turn are aping the habobs. So to keep up their "gentility" folks pinch and shave and grind and finally steal.

To me there is a dignity in honest poverty; a bravery in confessing "I am poor." A man is not what fortune, intellect or birth have made him in Mrs. Grundy's eyes. To be a man who could command respect anywhere, if all his wealth, high birth, or learning were stript from him, depends on his own manly virtue. But whitewashin' never seems so utterly contemptible and wicked as when used in religion. It seems cowardly enough to see a man (or woman, for I wont except my sect) profess friendship, when you feel that, snake-like, they charm but to devour. It seems despicable to see an ignorant upstart start out as a polished scholar with a few scraps of Latin and Greek, as "how tempus does fugit!" and equally contemptible to see an ill-bred nabob affect the airs of a gentleman because he has seen "Paris" or "Bosting." But when religion, the noblest aid of man, religion, whose essence is simplicity and truth itself, is made a cloak to cover wickedness, what can we call it? The man who, deacon though he may be, prays long and fervently that God will remember the poor, but grinds the last penny from the widow and the fatherless, deceives no one but himself. But though the whole world called him blessed, the God of the widow and the fatherless is never deceived and never forgets.

Whitewash don't pay. A man, like a fence, is made no stronger by the use of whitewash. The pains folks take in spreadin' whitewash to cover up the poor rough plaster of their faults and follies, would change that into the smooth hard finish of a noble honest character, which would last forever. Deceive no one, be brave, honest and you will receive the heartfelt praise of the world and Samantha Allen's sister.

DIED.

TERRY—At Big Rapids, Mich., on the 8th inst., Gove Terry; aged 35 years.

He met his death by accident, occasioned by a fall from a scaffold. His right ankle broke him unconscious, and he remained so for over twenty-four hours, when death came to his relief. No relative was near to smooth his brow. Father, wife and sister were miles away and could not minister to his wants. But luckily he was among friends, and all that medical aid could do was done to restore him to life. He was buried at Big Rapids on the 10th inst. Besides a father, brother and sister, he leaves a wife and three children to mourn his sudden and untimely end. "There's nothing certain in man's life but this; that he must lose it."

Death of James Conorton.

Another one of Tecumseh's old citizens has gone. James Conorton, an old and respected resident of this place passed away Tuesday afternoon, June 30th, at twenty minutes to two o'clock, surrounded by his faithful wife and children.

Mr. Conorton moved from West Farms, West Chester Co., N. Y., twenty-six years ago and settled in this village, where he has resided ever since. He was seventy years of age. Had been an invalid for two years, though his death came very suddenly. He leaves behind him an honorable record, was a faithful husband and devoted father. He was a strong advocate of Temperance, and died as he had lived, a true Christian. His funeral took place from his late residence, on Ottawa street, Sunday afternoon and was attended by a large number of friends. He was buried at Clinton, Michigan, in the family lot. He leaves a wife and four children, viz: Mrs. R. G. Bacon, Mrs. A. W. McIntyre, Mrs. F. W. French, of Toledo, O. and one son, Joseph, of this place.

What They Lead To.

Kidney troubles and Liver troubles, unless checked in time by Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," will end in Constipation, Piles, Rheumatism, and Gravel. The latter are ailments of very serious character. "Favorite Remedy" acts upon the disordered Kidneys and Liver with quickness and certainty. It is Nature's own device for this purpose. Ask for it when you are next in the store, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N.Y.

Scarlet fever at Monroe. There have been two deaths, and there are several cases now.

Debility resulting from typhoid and low fevers is best and most quietly relieved by Brown's Iron Bitters.

THE meeting at Eaton Rapids of the Central Michigan trotting, pacing and running circuit will be held Aug. 2, 3, 4 and 5, and no pains will be spared to make it a success. Purses $2,750. Fine trotting and running may be expected, if the weather is favorable. Admission 25 cents and ladies free. For program address A. Osborn, secretary, Eaton Rapids, Michigan.

THERE seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to the corporation taxes for this year. The tax is three mills on each dollar valuation of property, as fixed by the assessor and board of review. There is no road tax this year. The tax is the same as last year less the road work. For some years past the road tax has been one day's labor for each $1500 assessed valuation. Quite a reduction.

MRS. MUMFORD, of Adrian, has been stopping for a few days with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Peters. Last Sunday afternoon, while she was out riding, the horse became frightened, the fore wheels broke from the buggy and she was thrown out upon the ground with an infant she was holding in her arms. It was feared at the time that both were seriously hurt but on Monday they were all right again. It was an experience, however, that Mrs. Mumford will not care to repeat.

A FATAL ACCIDENT.

Mr. Gove Terry, a former resident of Tecumseh, but recently of Big Rapids, met with an accident on Friday last by which he lost his life. The circumstances of the sad affair, as nearly as we have been able to ascertain them, are these.

Last Saturday morning a dispatch was received by P. J. Welling from Ed. Merritt at Big Rapids, stating that Gove had fallen in a mill and was dangerously injured. At four o'clock P. M., another telegram came stating that he was rapidly failing and could not live. His father Mr. S. B. Terry took the first train for Big Rapids, but was unable to reach there until Monday forenoon too late to see him alive, Gove having dropped away at 6:30 on Saturday. Monday noon the family received a long letter from Ed. Merritt explaining the circumstances of the accident. Gove had been for some time at work for the same firm Mr. Merritt was engaged with, and was then at work nine miles from Big Rapids on a new saw mill. He was doing finely and was well liked by the firm. As soon as the mill was completed they were to build him a house and he was to have the position of engineer in the mill. At the time of the accident he was standing about fifteen feet from the ground upon a scaffold. He called to another man to help him move a beam into place, then stepped on the beam to walk to the other end where he was to lift. His companion, not noticing that Gove was on the beam, lifted up his end of it, pitching Gove off head foremost. As he fell he caught at a scantling, his left side striking it with force directly over the heart, and then falling to the ground upon his head and shoulders. He was picked up insensible and never had a moment's consciousness afterwards. This occured at two o'clock. Mr. Seaman went to Big Rapids and returned at once with a doctor, but nothing could be done for him. He was conveyed to Big Rapids on Saturday where he died at half-past six that afternoon. The funeral services were held on Monday. The remains were buried there, but will be brought home for final interment later in the season. Mr. S. B. Terry returned home on Tuesday a broken hearted man. He wishes to express his gratitude to Mr. Seaman, Mr. E. H. Merritt, and their families, for the kindness and attention shown to Gove in his sufferings, and to him during his brief stay at Big Rapids. Our community will deeply sympathize with the family of the deceased in their great affliction.

TELEPHONE TALK.

The construction gang are at work this week putting in our local exchange. The poles are about all set and the wire will be strung in a day or two. Some of the instruments will be placed in position this week, and all of them early next week.

At this writing—Thursday noon—we have twenty subscribers, and the prospects are favorable for six or eight more within a week.

In the next issue of the Herald we shall publish a full list of our local subscribers. At an early day we shall furnish each patron with a printed list of the members and also the towns connected in the state line.

The Detroit and Toledo line is rapidly approaching completion. The workmen were at Monroe yesterday and it is expected that we will have connection with Toledo by Saturday night.

The Adrian Times of Saturday, says:

Manager Mason, of the telephone exchange, talked with an old friend in Port Huron, yesterday, recognizing him by his voice. Residents of this city not having a telephone, and called by parties in other places, will be summoned by a messenger, an additional fee of ten cents being charged for such service.

Adrian Record of Saturday:

This morning at 8 o'clock, Howard Sickles took Dr. MacLean to the Lake Shore depot, and at 10:40 the doctor was talking through the telephone from Ann Arbor, enquiring about his sick horse. Railroads and electricity are wonderful things.

Adrian Times, Monday:

In the Congregational church, at Ann Arbor, is a Blake transmittor and a wire connecting it with the telephone exchange. Ann Arbor subscribers to the exchange have long been able to enjoy the privileges of the pastor's ministrations without the bother of going to church. Yesterday Ann Arbor was connected with this city, and the sermon of Rev. Mr. Ryder was enjoyed by the central office here, as well as by some subscribers. The sermon was audible, and the effect of the music at the close of the services was peculiarly pleasant.

Last Monday evening after ten o'clock Geo. Stacy called up the Detroit office for a business talk and was put into communication with Mt. Clemens. A boy in the latter office was playing on the guitar and mouth organ, and the music was heard by George in our office with perfect distinctness.

Last week W. W. Taylor, of Grand Rapids became father to a 10-pound girl, and before he had fairly caught his breath again he received a telegram stating that Hobart college had conferred the degree of M. A. upon him.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

ELEVENTH WEEK.

Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up?
—YOUNG.

The heights by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.
—LONGFELLOW.

"You see, young man," said Columbus, as he finished his sixth potato and his fifth cup of tea at Sunday morning's breakfast, "you see, it don't pay to raise corn. I guess you'll begin to find out blame by that I know somethin' after all. I advised you not to plant corn in the first place, but you would do it, and now, owing to the bist the pigs give it yesterday you can have the fun o' plantin it over agin. Its pretty late now to plant corn, but you can put in the eight rowed yellow. The corn must be planted over to-morrow, and then what's left o' the first crop must be cultivated, and here too you'll see the costlyness o' raisin' corn. Corn must be cultivated and hoed and hoed and cultivated from plantin' time till cuttin' up time, but peas don't need any hoin' for the hull season. Then its an awful expense to buy new cultivators, and Yankee cultivators aint good for nothin' when you buy 'em. You've got about forty old cultivators on the farm and there aint one of 'em that's worth the powder to blow it to Halifax. If I owned 'em, I'd make a bon-fire o' the hull calabash and sell the teeth for old iron. There's an old five tooth flat cultivator that must have come over with Noah in the ark, and a long legged cultivator on stilts, and a three shovel cultivator with thills, and a single shovel for hillin' up pertaters, and a two shovel for rippin' up things in gen'ral. Then you have a double cultivator for two hosses, and a triangle drag with the end tooth knocked out, and a sulky drag and a spring-tooth cultivator, but they aint none of 'em worth havin'. What you want, young man, is the Montreal double-geared, ring-tailed, corset-spring, electric combined cultivator and pertater digger. That will snatch the weeds everytime. Its worth more than any hoss you've got on the farm. That's the cultivator every one used over'n Canada who was fool enough to plant corn. It only costs fifty dollars, and it will wear a man's lifetime. As this is the second plantin', you must take extra pains in puttin it in, or you wont have corn enough in the fall for calf fodder. The corn must be shelled first. Its too late now to plant corn with the cob on. Soak it in a solution of copperas water, linseed oil and indigo blue and put a table-spoonful of plaster and ashes in each hill. If that don't fetch it up, we'll turn the pigs in agin." At this point the baby tipped out of its high chair on to the floor which changed the topic of conversation.

Monday, June 13th.—Columbus and Ellie both planted corn—one made the hills and the other put in the seed. Got two hundred pounds of mill feed for the cows. As Ichabod contended that mill feed did'nt agree with his cow, I got a bag of corn meal for her. When the hired girl placed the chairs for dinner, she accidentally dropped a stick of gum into Ichabod's chair, and when he arose from the table the chair went along with him. His wife broke the back off in trying to tear him loose. She proposed to melt him off with hot water. Ellie proposed to file him off with a buzz-saw file. I thought the best plan was to soak him off with weak lie. He objected to all of these plans however and finally extricated himself by donning a different suit. The chair was sent to the cabinet shop for repairs, and Ichabod resumed corn-planting at four o'clock, P. M.

Tuesday, June 14th.—Columbus and Ellie both worked at the second edition of corn-planting to-day. Ichabod broke two hoe-handles, and ran out of indigo blue, but no other mishap occurred and they finally finished the field in time for supper.

Wednesday, June 15th.—Columbus set out to cultivate corn this morning. He tried the five-tooth one and it clogged. The long legged one would tip over. He tried the scuffler and found it too dull. The single shovel went too deep and the one horse drag worked too shallow. He hitched to the thill cultivator and two teeth dropped out. He finally hooked to the two-horse wheel machine, made a cushion for the seat out of a pillow case stuffed with corn husks and essays, and finished the first row just as the dinner-horn blew. In the afternoon he did well and kept up with Ellie who gave the corn a coat of plaster and ashes.

Thursday, June 16th.—Columbus cultivated corn all day. About four o'clock in the afternoon he dropped into a woodchuck hole and the team went on to the fence. Ellie saw the team in the fence corner, started out on a searching expedition and found Ichabod and rescued him. Fortunately not a strap was injured on the harness and Columbus himself only had three fingers put out of joint. Ellie put plaster and ashes on the corn.

Friday, June 17th.—Columbus cultivated corn all day and finished the field. Ellie also finished sowing plaster and ashes. Perseverance conquereth all things.

Saturday, June 18th.—The boys chored round to-day and rested up after the arduous labors of the week.

"I tell you, young man," said Columbus, as he finished a five minute's blessing at Saturday's supper, "there's nothin' like stick-to-a-tiveness. Many a man would have let your corn went to thunder, but I hung on. I commenced stickin' last Monday noon and I have stuck and hung every day since. If you have any corn next fall, young man, you can thank my grit for the crop. As Horace said to Darius the Great, when he was haulin' the wooden hess into Troy. "Per severantia omnibus vincent, E pluribus onion, erin go Braugh." I haint felt as happy since I moved onto this ranch the first day of April last."

The heights by great men reached and kept,
In far off lands or right to hum,
Are not attained by those who sleep,
But those who stick to the like gum.

MEDDLESOME MOLLIE.

She was well named. She never saw anything in the way of closet, cupboard, box, bundle, parcel, package, or letter, but what her prying eyes were at once concerned in. And it was well if her mischievous fingers were not very soon concerned in it too.

She was, in most things, a very good little girl, but it is really surprising to see how many grave faults will spring from a habit which, perhaps, might not be called sinful in itself. Disobedience came with it, for she was often led into meddling with things her mother had forbidden her to touch. Then, to hide what she had been doing, she would sometimes be tempted to tell a lie.

Her mother often talked to her about the meanness of trying to spy into the affairs of other people. Mollie would promise to give up this bad habit, but forget all her good resolutions at sight of the first thing which seemed in any way to be hidden from her. She could not rest till it was found out, and her mother began to fear it would take some very severe lesson to cure her. And she was not sorry when the little lassie got herself into a scrape which was so ridiculous and so mortifying that she began to think that the best work in the world for little girls is minding their own business.

One Saturday morning her mother, before going out, suggested to Mollie that, as she was going visiting in the afternoon, it would be well for her to do her practising and weed her little garden in the morning. Miss Molly did not feel in a mood for work, and wandered idly into her mother's room. She opened the upper drawer of the bureau.

"Ah!" she exclaimed, in great pleasure, "that must be the new sash mother promised me. I am to wear it this afternoon. What a beauty!"

She looked with delight at the lovely pale blue, with its delicate brocading of moss rosebuds. She tried it on, making a very poor attempt at a big bow at the back, and tried to get a view of it in the glass. It was not very well, she laid the sash on the bureau, and turned her attention to a case of perfumery. She put some from each bottle on her handkerchief, and set them loosely on the bureau, not troubling herself to put them back in the case.

Then she took up a bottle that stood behind the glass, and, pulling out the cork, took a good smell. It almost knocked her down, and made the tears run from her eyes, for it was the strongest ammonia. Hastily setting it down, she knocked over two of the perfume bottles, and alas! they broke on the marble slab, and the perfume splashed over, and ran under the beautiful sash.

She gazed in dismay as soon as she could see anything. She carried it to the window and hung it in the sunshine to dry—then tried to clean up things on the bureau. While doing this she spied a bottle she had never seen before.

"Hair-oil!" she said to herself. "Now I can put some on my hair. Mamma never lets me have any—now I'll have plenty."

She did take plenty. She was proud of her hair. It was long and wavy and glossy. She daubed and smeared the oil over it without stint, and rubbed it in well. It did not make her hair quite so soft and shiny as she expected it would, but she forgot this for a while in the glass, for it was sad to see the streaks and blotches where the crimson and green of the rosebuds had "run" into the pale blue ground.

She folded and laid it back in her mother's drawer, then went to her own room, for she did not feel like seeing her just then.

Dinner-time came. The bell rang and rang again, but no Mollie appeared. Her mother sent a servant to her room to desire she would come down at once. And soon at the dining-room door appeared a forlorn figure with woeful face and tear-swollen eyes, and—such hair.

"What's the matter with your hair, my child?" cried her mother, in astonishment and alarm.

"Gr-r-r-racious!" exclaimed her elder brother.

"Je—whillikins!" shouted her youngest brother.

No wonder. Her hair hung in stiff strings and sticks, looking as if it were made of split shingles.

"What have you been doing to yourself?" asked mamma.

"I—I oiled it with the hair-oil on your bureau, mamma."

"I have no hair-oil. Go and bring what you have been using." She came and showed it—it was a bottle of prepared glue.

The boys gave a great shout of laughter, and thought it the best joke they had ever heard. But mamma took her poor little girl to her room and talked long and lovingly with her.

The pretty hair was all cut off so close that Mollie thought herself a perfect fright. But every time she looked in the glass, and very often besides, she remembered that it was her ugly trick of meddling that had caused her so much shame and vexation, and made up her mind she would persevere in curing herself of such an odious fault.

Whoever meddles in the affairs of others is a sneak, and "sneak" is the meanest word in the English language. Don't you think so?

The foundation of the present silk manufacture in the United States was laid in the making of sewing-silk. In 1843 the first establishment in Philadelphia for making sewing-silk was started, and in 1852 a ribbon factory was built. Since the year last named the sewing-silk and twist manufacture has wholly freed itself from foreign rivalry, but is subject to the keenest home competition. The total value of the silk manufactures for the census year 1850 was $1,809,746; for 1860, $6,607,771; for 1870, $12,240,662, and for 1880, $34,519,723.

A Beneficent Action.

The miserable looks and feelings of those confined at desks or work tables are caused by weak Stomach, Kidneys or Bowels. Parker's Ginger Tonic without intoxicating has such a beneficient action on these organs and so cleanses the poisonous matters from the system, that rosy cheeks and good health are soon brought back again.—Express.

Farm and Agricultural Notes.

Nearly 700 bushels of onions per acre were raised last year by Mr. George O. Mason, of Beverly, Mass.

The Ohio State Board of Agriculture estimates the coming wheat crop of that State at 36,512,[illegible] bushels, against 57,381,094 the last year.

The total exports of this country amounted last year to $[illegible],277,947, the proportion produced by agriculture being $[illegible],650,016, or very nearly 83 per cent.

The dairy farmers of Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin have increased 6% per cent. during the last ten years, while the increase in New York State was but 5 per cent.

The most important study of a cultivator of the soil is to plan for such crops as will always be in demand and always pay; crops that will be in demand year after year.

Gather no seed from a forest tree that is not clean and straight and a rapid grower. Scrub trees beget their like. The law of heredity holds good in trees as well as in the lower animals and men.

An Australian wine-grower has formed a company which promises to produce excellent champagne at $10 per dozen. Australia already exports wine to France for mixing with the product of the latter country.

While the Southern floods have been damaging to a great degree, yet it is claimed that the sediment deposited is very valuable, and the cotton lands will be worth from $4 to $6 more per acre than formerly.

Very recent reports to interested parties in New York from the States of Delaware and Maryland, whence the peaches are to come this year, show that the crop promises at present from 4,500,000 to 5,250,000 baskets.

If you have hens of the right breed and age, warm and sunny quarters for them to stay in, and keep them supplied with everything they need, you will have eggs, simply because hens can no more help laying than they can help breathing.

The value of all farms in the United States is estimated at $10,196,890,645; value of farm implements at $456,516,902, live stock, $1,500,487,189; fertilizers purchased and used in 1879, $27,598,859; fences, cost of building and repairing in 1879, $77,765,723.

The South does not grow enough provisions for home use, despite the advance made in that direction. So far this season she has drawn on the North for wheat to the value of $55,000,000; corn, $50,000,000, and provisions, $72,000,000. Total, $177,000,000.

A successful Boston florist says that he seldom fails to root slips of the most tender and rare plants. He credits his success to a layer of oats placed under the usual layer of sand in which the slips are planted. When moistened they act as a stimulant and feeder to the tender roots of the slip.

Hundreds of farmers in Pennsylvania have turned their attention to fish culture. Many have stocked ponds and streams, and in most cases they have been successful, especially with carp, and in a few years they will depend upon fish for a subsistence as much as upon any other farm product.

An English mechanic has invented a horseshoe composed of three thicknesses of cowhide compressed into a stout [illegible] aration. It will last longer than the common shoe, weighs only one-fourth as much, does not split the hoofs, requires no calks, and is very elastic.

Baltimore has an "electric boy," recently brought from South America and soon to be placed on exhibition. He is so highly charged that all he touches becomes magnetized, and an entire assemblage is electrified by touching him. The rubbing together of his hands produces a beautiful effect of sparkling, livid fire. The citizens are going to attach wires to him and establish a new system of electric lamps for street use.

The orange crop in Florida will be very light this season. The cause cannot but partially be accounted for. There is found a very dangerous insect in many groves which has effected much damage. The insect many years ago caused infinite trouble in the orange groves, and it was thought at one time that orange culture would have to be abandoned in the state. Of late years the trees have not been greatly troubled in this way.

The world's production of precious metals last year, according to the Mining Record, was about as follows: United States $31,000,000 gold, $42,500,000 silver; Mexico and Spanish America, $8,000,000 gold, $18,000,000 silver; Russia and Asia, $22,000,000 gold, $500,000 silver; Europe, $1,500,000 gold, $10,000,000 silver; Austria and Pacific Islands, $26,500,000 gold, $500,000 silver. Total, $99,000,000 gold, $81,500,000 silver, or $171,500,000 in all.

The French Government, which maintains a monopoly on the sale of tobacco within its Territory, have awarded the contract for supplies of the American weed, as follows: Ten thousand hogsheads of Kentucky tobacco, divided between Messrs. Hoffman & Huffer, both of Paris; 3,000 hogsheads of Virginia, to Marquis de Compo, of Madrid; 6,000 hogsheads of Maryland, to Huffer, and 2,000 hogsheads of Ohio, to Hoffman. Messrs. Toll, Rose & Co. and Mr. G. Reusens, of New York, are the agents of the Kentucky award, and Reynes Bro., of New York, the Virginia.

A veteran officer at the review of the West Point cadets the other day remarked that neither General Sherman nor General Howard was attired in regulation garb. To the eye of the layman their cocked hats, ostrich plumes, gold cords, epaulets and sashes left nothing to be desired. But the veteran, more in sorrow than in anger, pointed out that neither wore spurs, that General Sherman was without a sword, and that General Howard's hat was rear side before. Nevertheless the review passed off successfully and the heavens did not fall.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

A Peculiar Prescription.

The Drinking of Blood for its Restorative Qualities.

"You see that lady stepping out of her carriage," said a city official to a reporter, pointing to an elegantly dressed woman of society. "What of her?"

"She drinks a glass of warm bullock's blood every day of her life—consumptive, you know. Fact, sir, fact. If you want to know anything about those matters go to the slaughter-houses and watch 'em for yourself, or if your life is too short, tackle the wholesale butchers at the markets."

The reporter took a trip out to the slaughter-house of Michael Riley, and stating the object of his visit to that gentleman, was advised to watch for himself. During the half hour that he remained, there came five persons, who each drank from a glass to a glass and a half of the hot blood just as the hearts were in their death throes. One of the five was a young man of 20, fashionably attired, and with the air of a student who had burned the midnight oil to a dangerous extent, and also bore the traces of dissipation. Another was an elderly gentleman who came in a private and aristocratic brougham, drawn by two heavy English carriage horses, and driven by a liveried coachman, who knew just where to pull up, as he had evidently been there before.

The other three were ladies; one a young miss just blossoming into womanhood, but with fragile form and ashy lips; she drank the ruddy beverage with a slight tremor and averted head, while the elderly lady who accompanied her drank hers with evident relish, and put out her tumbler for another glass of which, however, she only drank half. The fifth person was a tall blonde of spiritually appearance, clad in a tight-fitting, gray shopping costume, and of her it was said that she had visited the abattoir daily for several months.

"But I see only the well-to-do people," said the scribe.

"Yes," said the jovial Mike, with a smile. "Only the wealthy can enjoy life, and everybody admits that there is life in bullock's blood. You mustn't suppose, however, that we charge anything for the sanguinary fluid, on the contrary, we give it away, and that I suppose is why the poor people stay at home and die of consumption, because they believe any remedy to be good or effective must be high-priced. Don't you want a glass?"

The reporter stifled his emotion and strode rapidly away, followed by Mr. Riley, puffing and blowing from exertion. "If you want to know any more about this thing, go down to Union Market and see my brother Walter."

Mr. Walter Riley was found at his stand in the Union Market smoking a post-prandial pipe. Said he:

"I've talked with Drs. Bond and Digges about the efficacy of bullock's blood for pulmonary troubles but they are reticent about it. As I understand consumption, it is a wasting away of the lungs and an impoverishment of the blood. Now, blood is a thousand per cent. better, to my thinking, than cod liver oil, and tastes better. You want the blood of a young animal, and if you let me blindfold you I'll bet you a new tile you can't tell it from milk fresh from the udder, but more than one glass would nauseate you at first. You must tried the doctors they come to the abatoirs as a last resource, and I can tell you I have seen some wonderful cures. Of course the doctors won't advocate it, but I know one physician who gives it to his wife right straight along, so he must have faith in it. Sometimes they wait until they're too far gone, and then of course it is no use trying that or anything else. I don't see why they wait until the doctors have given 'em up."

"How many people drink blood in St. Louis?"

"Not over 125, I should judge. They believe in it more in the East, particularly in New York, where thousands drink it daily."—St. Louis Republican.

Weight of the Human Brain.

Lately M. Paul Topinard has reviewed the researches of Broca regarding the weight of the brain in the human species. The figures obtained by Broca and the author appear to indicate that excessive weight is no prima-facie evidence of great intellectuality. Even the ponderous brain of Cuvier, which weighed 1,820 grammes, is considered to be due in no small degree to the well-attested presence of hydrocephalus during the infancy of the great naturalist. The mean weight of the brain of men is 1,325 grammes, and of women 1,142 grammes, the greatest weight among the former being attained generally between the ages of 30 and 35, and among the latter at a somewhat earlier period. After the age of 55 the diminution is very rapid, and the loss at the age of 80 reached from 100 to 250 grammes.—These figures must, however, be accepted with great caution. Most of the observations were made on the heads of persons who had died in hospitals, and who were presumably more or less affected with brain disease. There are no existing tables determining the difference of the weight of the brain among mentally sound persons belonging to the two distinct classes of those engaged in intellectual pursuits and those who obtain a living by manual labor.

It is stated that a Chicago young lady has ruined her feet by wearing shoes a size too large for her. Now the question which naturally arises is, where did she get the shoes?—Puck.

A Pleasant Letter.

Special Telegram.

Zeeland, Mich.—Please find enclosed draft for amount of Invoice, May 7, 1879. The Baxter Mandrake Bitters give the best satisfaction of any patent medicine I handle. They have advertised themselves after selling a few bottles, and I warrant every bottle. N. DeKrief, Druggist.

Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dizziness in the Head, Indigestion, Constipation, and all similar diseases, yield readily to the effect of Baxter's Mandrake Bitters. Price 25 cts. per bottle.

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principle. It realizes that

95 Per Cent.

of all diseases arise from deranged Kidneys and Liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes, ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For Sale by all dealers.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, with the unparalleled demand with which it meets stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.

IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 932 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 10 Spruce St., New York.

Artemus Ward.

Some Jokes of His and Anecdotes of Actors.

One of the leading men in America in theatrical matters, when it was proposed to bring out the "Passion Play" at his theatre, turned to the stage manager and asked:

"But, see here—how many characters will there be? I want to know."

"Well, sir, there'll be our 'Lord,' you know, and 'Caiphas,' the high priest, and 'Nicodemus' and twelve disciples—"

"Twelve! twelve disciples! On my stage? I'll have forty of 'em!"

Of course when a manager is reckless enough to think of amending the evangelists in this wholesale way to suit the dimensions of his stage (granted, that he knew, which was doubtful, the actual number of the disciples) he would not be likely to respect any author's manuscript or his ideas. And, indeed, few managers ever think of doing any such thing. Their standing order in regard to plays is "Cut! cut! cut!" and a Philadelphia manager, who enjoyed the fame of reducing "Speed the Plow" to a single act, used to carry this practice so far that a member of his company once said of him: "C. would 'cut' the Lord's Prayer down to a single sentence!" The manager spoken of above is rather notorious for his slips of the tongue. He is very much afraid of the water, and, coming to New York from Boston one stormy night on a Sound Steamer, he is reported to have exclaimed, as he leaped ashore as soon as the boat reached her pier, "Thank Heaven! I am on vice versa once more!"

The late Artemus Ward (Charles F. Browne) knew what he was about when he courted the company of actors and journalists so assiduously. He took from them much more than he gave, good companion as he was, and it was the actors who taught him to give expression to his irresistible flow of spirits in a succession of practical jokes of a harmless sort, yet comical beyond measure by their very oddity and unexpectedness. "Come in here! come in here! said he one day in Boston to the companion walking with him. "Come in here: we will have some fun." It was a Boston pie-bakery which they entered—a place where pies were a specialty—where pies and nothing but pies were sold, wholesale and retail, all the live-long day. Browne approached the counter, behind which the proprietor of the establishment was standing, and asked, in his bland, insinuating voice, "Have you any pies?" "Pies!" repeated the astounded proprietor. "Yes, pies." "Pies!" repeated the man, still more dumbfounded. "Of course—pies! Have you any—pies?" "Pies!" gazed the shopman once more, gazing at Browne as if he thought him an escaped lunatic. "Oh, well, if you haven't got any pies, I'll inquire somewhere else: come Jack!" and he marched his friend out of the shop again before the salesman could recover his wits.

Artemus delegated to fillip the sedate respectability of Boston, while loving the place sincerely. One day, in the early afternoon, having a lecture to deliver that evening, some of his friends concluded that he would not be able to talk so well at night if he kept on talking in front of the bar at the Parker House. They accordingly insisted on an immediate adjournment, and Artemus to revenge himself. He locked arms with two gentlemen very well known, indeed, in the city—one a manager of the leading theatre, the other a public officer, high in the confidence and books of the Commonwealth, and walked off with them along the city's most crowded and fashionable thoroughfare. Acting as if he was in the custody and needed the care of his companions, and making his voice conspicuously loud, Artemus began: "Gentlemen, you are probably aware that the noble red man, the incomparable savage of our plains, forests and mountain fastnesses, whom I have studied closely in his native wilds, has various modes of expressing the emotions which swell his generous bosom and of giving voice to the ceremonial traditions inherited from an immemorial ancestry. His cries and his dances are equally peculiar, and he has a particular sort of whoop for each particular occasion. The scalp dance, the war-dance, the bear dance, the dance of skulls, each has its appropriate halloo, and so has the feast of the moon, the harvest feast and so forth. But no verbal description, gentlemen, can give you an idea of these vigorous cries. They must be heard to be appreciated and to him who has never heard them they are startling as the revelations of a life-time. In illustration of what I have said, gentleman, I will now proceed to give you an imitation of the yell of the noble savage as, tomahawk in hand, he springs exultant from his ambush upon the astounded foe."

Thereupon Browne executed a startling and tremendous war-whoop, which made people turn for blocks around and drew upon him the attention of thousands.

"I will now give you," said Artemus, after regaining his breath, "a faint imitation of the warrior's cry as he returns to his wigwam, the scalp of his slain enemy dangling in gory ghastliness at his belt."

Another war-whoop; and thus the scamp kept up his game for a mile or so, until his friends got him at last to his hotel.

It was in 1863 that "The Duke's Motto" was first played in New York. It had been imported—the English translation—by an Irish actor. McDonnell, who intended playing "Lagardere," Wm. Wheatley, however, who brought it out, took the part of "Lagardere" himself, casting McDonnell as "Carrickfergus." While the piece was being played the draft riots broke out, and business fell off to almost nothing. Wheatley wanted to close the house, but his contract forbade it, so he fell sick conveniently, and McDonnell's ambition was satisfied, he played "Lagardere" and Doyle, another of the company, acting "Carrickfergus." They played, however, to less than would pay for gas-bills, and at last Wheatley locked the house up in absolute disgust. Old man Saulsbury, a quaint musician and Briton, was in the orchestra at the time. "Some one said to him: "Why, Saulsbury, I see your house is closed—what's the matter? "Well, you see," he replied slowly, "McDonnell, he undertook to play 'Lagardere,' and Doyle he undertook to play 'Carrickfergus,' and the two undertakers have buried the piece.

Indeed, almost all actors, who are really wedded to their profession, unconsciously learn to think their life upon the boards the real one and all else only counterfeit and tinsel. This makes them miscalculate the actual proportion of things, but helps them to become delightful companions. Joseph Jefferson, charming gentleman and the most natural and unaffected of all actors, is yet nearly as much an actor off the stage as on—in both places, however, perfectly aware of the force of the maxim "ars est celare artem." Some actors, indeed, carry their art with them to the very brink of the dark river. Eph Horn, the famous jester and minstrel, when he was dying was under the generous care of big-hearted Tony Pastor. He suffered much, and Tony was afraid his nervous system would break down. "Now, old man," said he, "I know you'll do the best you can. All of us have to face this sort of music one day or another. There's no help for it. You always were a plucky chap, and I know you ain't going to funk now; are you, Eph?" "Well, Tony, no; I reckon not. There isn't any use in kicking against the pricks; besides," whispered the old minstrel, with a feeble attempt at a smile, "You know I always was a good end man!" And with that he turned over and died.—Baltimore Day.

Dostoefsky's Pigeon.

A writer in the Journal Kavkaz relates a touching incident in Dostoefsky's exile life in Siberia. In the household of a certain officer, to whose charge the novelist and other prisoners were at one time committed, was a governess, to whom belonged a number of tame pigeons. The governess was considered to have great influence over the officer, and the exiles stood duly in awe of her, though among themselves she was spoken of as "Nyetka" (a disrespectful diminutive of Anna). "Nyetka's pigeons used often to fly into our yard," says the narrator, "and many of us looked at them with covetous eyes. The warders, however, kept a sharp lookout that we did not catch any of them."

One young pigeon grew particularly attached to Dostoefsky, who fed it regularly with bread, so that it came every day to him for its dole. At first the warders were for preventing this, but seeing that Dostoefsky meant the bird no harm they winked at the slight indulgence. One day the prisoners, on account of some unusually laborious work upon which they had been employed during the day, were brought back to the prison a little earlier than the wonted hour. It happened that they passed by the officer's house just as the governess was feeding her pigeons. A madcap thought came into Dostoefsky's head. He yielded to it, and whistled his favorite to him. The birds all rose in the air, and the prisoner's pet flew up to him and began circling round his head. The governess, enraged at this, rushed straight up to Dostoefsky: "Is it you, you scoundrel, who entice away my pigeons? You shall pay for this." The narrator could not catch the words of Dostoefsky's reply, they seemed, however, to convey some impressive rebuke. Contrary to expectation, Dostoefsky was not punished in [illegible] later the prisoners learned that Nyetka had gone back to Russia taking her pigeons with her. But the bird that the novelist had attached to himself continued to come to his hand. Whether it had escaped and returned to him out of its own accord, or whether it was intentionally left for the poor prisoner by the impulsive, but perhaps good-hearted Nyetka, remained a mystery. One thing was certain—the treatment of the prisoners grew more harsh after her departure.—Athenæum.

Too Many Generals.

During the recent Army re-union at Detroit, says the Free Press of that city, a saloon keeper who spent considerable money for decorations and worked his patriotism up to the top round, was heard wondering if any of the Generals would be around to see him, and this gave one of his acquaintances a clue to work on. He went off and put up a job with a friend, and yesterday morning walked him into the saloon and said:

"Allow me to introduce Gen. Alpaca Smith, the hero of three wars and eighty-four battles."

"Sheneral, I vhas glad to see you," said the saloonist, and he set 'em up for the three.

In the course of twenty minutes the deceiver returned with another stranger on his arm and said:

"Allow me to introduce Gen. Commissary Jones, the man who fired the first gun in the war."

"Sheneral, I vhas bleased to shake hands mit you," said the man of beer, and he set 'em up again.

Then the friend went out and returned with Gen. Hard Tack, and after him came Gens. Debility and Back Pay. The last one received a rather cool greeting, and the beer glasses were not quite full, and after he had departed the saloonist turned to his friend and said:

"My frent, I vhas mooch bleased to see all dose great shenerals in mine saloon, but you needn't bring any more to-day. From now until night we'll let der shenerals go and look out for the fighting man. Dose men always bay cash for beer!"

How Children are "Toughened."

As for "toughening" children by sending them half-dressed into the damp or biting air, none but ignorant and stupid people do such things—our church yards are already sufficiently full of little graves. Give the children warm feet, something over their ears, and good staunch flannels between them and Jack Frost, and they will grow up far stronger and "tougher" than the poor little shivering ones who have to pull their heads into their shoulders, and huddle together like calves in a winter's storm, for lack of sensible clothes.

An agreeable dressing for the hair, that will stop its falling, has been long sought for. Parker's Hair Balsam, distinguished for its purity, fully supplies this want.

Gas and Electric Lights.

There is no need to jump to the conclusion, as so many people did when the report of Mr. Edison's inventions first came from America, that gas is a thing of the past and that electricity has already won the battle. No doubt electricity is gaining upon its rival, but that all electric lights are better than all gas-lights is a proposition that is easily disproved by anyone who takes a walk at night down Holborn and across the viaduct. The city authorities, who, whatever their faults, are ready enough to make experiments for the public service, are trying the Edison incandescent on the viaduct and the Siemens improved gas in Holborn. We do not know anything of the relative cost of the two systems, but as far as the light is concerned there is simply no comparison. The gas triumphs all along the line. There are other reasons which should make prudent people hesitate before investing in any of the multitudinous electrical companies with which the market is now being flooded—for example, there is the question of patents, and the extreme difficulty of deciding whether one system is not an infringement of another. There is, again, the question, which only time can decide, of which system or systems are really the best. Still, time will decide these points, and though many an unhappy investor may suffer, the public will benefit. For there are no two opinions about the desirability of finding some substitute for the foul gas which we are at present condemned to burn in our houses and buildings. It may be that under the spur of competition the chemical advisers of the gas companies will discover some way of making the gas they supply less trying to eye and brain, less ruinous to our books, our ceilings, our wall-papers, and whatever else comes in contact with its fumes. Till that is done, or till electricity has come in to help us, many of us have returned to the candles and oil lamps of our ancestors in sheer despair. At present, too, an evening in a theatre or concert-room is an evening of penance; for in all the London theatres but two or three there is no adequate ventilation, so that the combination of gas-lamps and crowds make the atmosphere intolerable. We can not hope that managers and architects will ever master the theory of ventilation, but we may hope for an alleviation of our sufferings when the electric light is generally adopted. The one London theatre which at present possesses it is a striking and welcome exception to the general rule which demands that a place of amusement should be like the Grotto del Cane at Naples, or like the Channel tunnel when Dr. Siemen's proposed scheme of carbonic acid is in operation — a place where neither man nor animal can breathe.—London Times.

Pulling Callie's Tooth.

"That tooth must come out," said mamma. Because, you see, it was loose, and there was a new tooth pushing right along behind it.

"It'll hurt!" said Callie, with a doleful quaver.

"Not much, I guess," answered mamma, cheerfully. "Open your mouth, dear," and she managed to tie a strong linen thread around the tooth before Callie shut her mouth again tight.

"I ca-ant have it pulled!" said she.

"Very well, said mamma, waxed a little, "you must keep the string around it until you can."

Then Callie's trials began. Papa was going over to the village, and he said Callie might go with him. But how could she, with that awful string hanging out of her mouth?

"Maybe I can pull it, now," said Callie. "Count ten, mamma."

"One-two-three-four-five-six-seven-eight-nine-t-e-n," counted mamma with long pauses.

"Oh, I can't" cried Callie.

And she didn't: and papa went to the village without her.

It was almost Fourth of July, and there was to be a picnic in the grove, and Nannie Slater said her mother was going to make currant-pies; Callie liked currant-pies above everything else, to eat.

"But you can't go to the picnic with that string," said mamma.

So, one day, Callie went out on the door-step and sat down to think it over. Joe was splitting wood in the yard. Joe was papa's chore-boy.

"I'll tell you how to pull it," said he.

"How?" asked Callie.

"Hitch it to the door-knob and then open the door," said Joe. "If you're 'fraid 'twill hurt, you needn't open it but a little."

"Well, I will," said Callie: and she tied one end of her "tooth-string to the door-knob. But it wasn't a mite of use, for when she opened the door she walked right in after it.

"Joe's eyes began to laugh.

"I guess I'll get a drink of water, said he. He went in, and pretty soon he wanted to come out again.

"Go e-easy! o-oh!" screamed Callie.

But Joe didn't go a bit easy. He banged the door open so quick that Callie couldn't keep up with it. And there hung her tooth on the door-knob.

"What made you?" she demanded, and she sat down to cry about it. But when she found it didn't bleed the least mite, nor hurt any, she began to laugh instead.

"Anyway, now I can go to the picnic and have some currant-pie," she said; "and that's one comfort."

Hamilton Fish's residence, at Second avenue and Seventeenth street, New York, stands upon the ground which was formerly a part of the farm of P. Stuyvesant. Mr. Fish's mother was a Stuyvesant, and the land has been in the possession of the family for over 200 years. There is said to be no deed of it in existence.

Improvement for Mind and Body.

There is more strength-restoring power in a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids consequently find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body.—Commercial.

The statement that Minister Lowell has tendered his resignation is officially denied at the white house, and also at the state department.

The coinage at the mints of the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30 is valued at $117,841,574, of which $37,771,574 were standard dollars.

Pres. Arthur has nominated J. A. Zabriskie to be attorney for Arizona, and E. L. Tibbalt, of New York, to be marshall of the same territory, and William P. Chandler, of Illinois, to be surveyor general of Idaho.

The secretary of the treasury on Monday issued a call for $16,000,000 6 per cent. bonds continued at 3½ per cent. from July, 1881.—Principal and accrued interest will be paid the 15th of September next, and the interest cease that day.

The adjournment of congress need hardly be looked for before August, on account of the vast amount of work still before the senate. Democratic senators will insist upon greater reductions in internal revenue taxation.

It is officially stated at the war department that four additional light batteries will be equipped. It is also understood that General Sherman is in favor of the detail of three years for captains and five for lieutenants on light artillery duty.

Public Printer Rounds is wielding the ax vigorously in his office, and making many removals and new appointments. He has nearly depleted the Ebbet House of chambermaids by giving them positions in the public printing office at better pay than they have been receiving, and has demoralized the colored waiters by appointing several of them to places.

In the publication of the Treasurer's monthly statement of liabilities and assets it is observed that the Treasury resumption fund has lately been run down to less than $120,000,000, which is not quite 35 per cent. of legal tender note circulation. This is a lower percentage than has heretofore been considered safe, and surprise is expressed that Secretary Folger should suffer the depletion of the fund to take place.

Owing to insufficient appropriations, the national board of health will close the stations on the line of emigrant travel to the west. This action will involve the suspension of inland inspection of foreign emmigrants for the discovery and prevention of the transmission of small-pox at ten stations distributed on the trunk-line railways in the north, and the inspection of infected vessels arriving at our ports from yellow fever points abroad.

A Sunday paper published an interview with Rev. Dr. Hicks, in which he states that on the occasion of the Guiteau autopsy he dismissed Drs. Sowers and Hartigan because they interfered with Dr. Lamb and delayed progress. Dr. Hartigan has sent the press to-night a card signed by several surgeons present stating that "neither Dr. Sowers nor Hartigan interposed a single objection or uttered a word, or retarded in any way the progress of the autopsy."

According to a rumor, a new indictment in the star-route cases will include Thomas J. Brady, John W. and Stephen Dorsey, prominent as a United States senator, and John A. Walsh, and will be based on a transaction connected with the Saulsbury contracts on the Louisiana and Texas routes. It is also rumored that conflicting affidavits will be filed against the others.

Robert P. Porter, who is a member of the Tariff Commission, refuses to give up one of his other places, that of special agent of the census office, in charge of debt, wealth and taxation division. Both of these places pay $10 per day each. There are several applicants for his position in the census office, all of whom contend that Porter cannot legally draw the salaries of both places, and that he will have to resign one place or the other.

Col. W. S. Scribner, of Illinois, is an applicant for the governorship of Montana Territory. Col. Scribner is now in Washington looking after his interests in connection with the appointment. He is strongly indorsed by a large number of prominent republicans of the county, including a majority of the Illinois republican delegation in congress. The colonel seems quite confident that he will receive the appointment.

It is understood that the Tariff Commission will not remain in session much longer here. They have already about made up their mind that it will be impossible for them to have a report ready by the next session of Congress, owing to lack of time. Notwithstanding the denial of Hayes, it is asserted that Secretary Folger says that the Tariff Commissioners did request that he appoint a clerk for each member of the commission, or give them power individually to do so. He promptly declined the request.

Over $500,000 has been expended by congress in the improvement of the grounds about the capitol. Several years ago this work was placed under the care of Frederick Law Olmstead, and he changed the entire character of the grounds. With the purchase of additional lands over $1,000,000 has been expended.—Congress each year appropriates from $75,000 to $100,000 for additional improvements. Where this money goes it is very hard to see. In the sundry civil bill this year $75,000 is to be appropriated; yet there is in contemplation no system of new improvements.

Secretary Folger, in his report of the investigation of the Doyle bond-plate, states that never have two bonds of the same number been offered for redemption, and that no bond with a number higher than or different from some genuine numbers has ever been presented at the treasury. These facts, he claims, dispose of the published rumor that $22,000,000 in spurious securities were struck off by the counterfeiters. Treasury agents, after full investigation, found no basis for the story that more than 204 counterfeit bonds were found in Doyle's hands. The Secretary believes that no plate or die has been furnished by treasury employes with which to manufacture spurious securities.

There is delay in the confirmation of the recent appointment of Hon. T. B. Axtel to the justiceship of New Mexico. It is learned that the opposition comes from the Ohio senators. Senator Sherman being especially against his success. He and his colleague do not want Mr. Axtel credited to that state. The latter was appointed governor of New Mexico at the instance of President Grant, and removed by President Hayes upon charges of a trivial nature. It is asserted that there was trouble in Colfax and Lincoln counties during his administration, and that his action in the premises occasioned the ill will of certain parties, who, through their attorneys, did all in their power to have him dismissed; that on another occasion he invited Mormon emigrants to the territory. It is stated, however, that among all the charges but a few of them were of such a character as would not warrant his confirmation.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JULY 3.—The senate bill authorizing the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of Menominee Indians, in Wisconsin, passed. The senate bill to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe passed, with an amendment extending the time within which the company shall begin laying cable to two years from the passage of the act. The senate bill to amend section 3,325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, touching the issuance of patents for mineral lands was called up and passed. The general deficiency bill appropriating $78,000 for the payment of awards, and limiting the amount to be certified and paid for medical services to $52,500, and passed. On motion of Mr. Mahone, the judiciary committee was instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing for payment of expenses necessary incurred by circuit judges while on duty away from their homes. After placing the bankruptcy bill on orders as unfinished business, the senate adjourned until Wednesday.

JULY 5.—The senate voted to postpone for the session consideration of the national bankrupt law. The bill for the relief of Ben Holliday was briefly considered. The act to create the territory of Pembina came up, and provoked a hot debate, Mr. Vest insisting on the repeal of the Dakota law in relation to the repudiation of bonds of Yankton county.—The river and harbor bill was reported, when a brief executive session closed what passes for a day's work in the national capitol.

JULY 6.—In the senate, Thursday, the river and harbor appropriation bill, covering $19,483,975, was taken up. Mr. McMillan briefly reviewed the amendments made by the senate committee. The item for $100,000 for surveying the Hennepin canal called out speeches from Messrs. Butler, Beck, Vest, and Allison. The former gave notice of a proposed modification of the amendment, when the committee rose and the senate adjourned.

JULY 7.—The senate resumed work on the river and harbor appropriation. Mr. Logan urged the importance of constructing the Hennepin canal, stating that the cost would not exceed $4,000,000. Mr. Vest claimed that the national government had no right to assume jurisdiction over the enterprise, and stated that manufacturing towns along the Rock river had entered protests against the canal. Mr. Hawley reviewed canal management in the middle states, to show the difficulties encountered. Mr. Sherman thought the matter should be considered as a separate measure. Mr. Morgan said the purpose of the scheme was to divert traffic from New Orleans to Chicago. Mr. Hawley gave warning that $100,000 would be but a drop in the bucket. Messrs. Allison and Windom spoke in favor of the project and Mr. Butler in opposition, when an adjournment was taken.

JULY 8.—The senate passed a joint resolution to allow the employes of the government printing office pay for time lost during the Garfield obsequies. Mr. Beck gave notice of an amendment to the internal revenue bill subjecting duties on imports to a discount of 10 per cent. after January next, and to a similar reduction after the July following. The river and harbor bill coming up in committee of the whole, discussion was renewed on the item for the survey of the Hennepin canal. The latter scheme was modified to provide that the secretary of war can use $100,000 in surveying and locating a canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, and in making estimates for its cost and maintenance. Mr. Logan secured an amendment for the survey of the Illinois and Michigan canal. Mr. Ransom proposed an appropriation of $500,000 for the improvement of the Potomac river flats.

HOUSE.

JULY 3.—The senate bill passed for a public building Terre Haute, Ind. Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill to correct the error in the Revised Statutes relative to the duty on knit goods. The conferees on legislative appropriation bill are Messrs. Cannon, of Illinois, Hiscock, of New York and Atkins of Tennessee. The senate has receded from its amendment to the Crow Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Montana required for the Northern Pacific Railway company passed.—On motion of Mr. Ford, of Missouri, the rules were suspended and the bill passed appropriating $50,000 for the erection of a public building at St. Joseph, Mo., the ultimate cost of which shall not exceed $85,000. Mr. Paul, of Virginia, moved to suspend the rules and pass the senate bill providing for the erection of public buildings at Harrisonburg and Abingdon, Va., and appropriating $50,000 each for that purpose. The motion prevailed, notwithstanding Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, in opposition to the bill, said as far as he had learned the only product of the two towns were pennyroyal and sassafras, which grew largely in the streets. There was not enough business there to keep down their growth so that small children could walk about in the woods without getting lost. The senate amendment to the house bill to pay mileage (7 cent) and per diem ($2.50) to witness in star-route cases from beyond the Mississipi river was agreed to. Adjourned to Wednesday.

JULY 5.—The house went into committee of the whole on the naval appropriation. Mr. Atkins moved to reduce the item for the bureau of construction and repair to $1,500,000. Mr. Robeson thought this would be a declaration that we have no navy. Mr. Ellis pointed out the war-clouds on the horizon, and pronounced for a reconstruction of the navy. An amendment by Mr. Harris was adopted, that any portion of the item of $1,750,000 not wanted for the purposes specified may be applied to the construction of two cruising vessels of war.—The committee reported the bill to the house, the previous question was seconded, and an adjournment was affected.

JULY 6.—In the house, a joint resolution was passed authorizing the president to call an international conference to fix a common prime meridian. In closing the debate on the naval appropriation bill Mr. Robeson indulged in harsh reflections upon Mr. Washburne, the latter responding by branding Robeson as a falsifier and perjurer. The naval appropriation passed by 119 to 75. Objection was made to the bill for a pension to Mrs. Garfield, on the ground that it would give rise to debate, and the house went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. Mr. Hiscock explained the items in the act. Mr. Blackburn criticised the majority for not having already disposed of the general appropriation bills. Mr. Bayne said President Arthur had violated his promise to stand by the civil-service plank of the republican platform.

JULY 7.—The house of representatives went into committee of the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The clause in the bill appropriating $15,000 for salaries for the Utah commission was struck out, when the committee rose. Mr. Deuster introduced a bill to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea, drawn in accordance with the president's suggestions. Mr. Cox offered a resolution that the president furnish information in regard to the pool into which the French cable company has lately entered. An evening session was held to consider pension bills, when forty-five were passed.

JULY 8.—In the house, Mr. Crapo submitted the report of the conference committee on the bill to extend the charters of national banks. The Sundry civil appropriation bill was considered in committee of the whole. An amendment to restrict the national board of health to an investigation of cholera and yellow fever was rejected, and it was resolved to add small-pox to the list. Mr. Kasson secured an appropriation of $45,000 for the enlargement of the public building at Des Moines. The allowance to the Washington gas company was reduced to $2) per lamp. Mr. Willis, of Kentucky, finding legislation too dull arraigned John D. White, his colleague, as "a slanderous man, filled with malice," but Mr. Browne, of Indiana, forestalled a motion by protesting against turning the halls of congress into a bear-garden.

Have you sold your wool?

A PLEASANT LETTER.

It Rings of a Grateful Heart and Gives Honor Where Honor is Due.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, [illegible] "Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced everything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote and says: "I have had no pain for six months and I have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments, These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you Derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder, associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices Medicine and Surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Address Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

SPRINGVILLE.

A few commenced harvesting last week but the main part of the wheat will be cut this week.

W. A. Whitney has been painting the dwelling of A. E. Jessup.

We have heard of no cases of bustling yet, although it was predicted by some that certain ones would bush.

Robert Sherrard purchased a self-binder of W. H. Smith and he says he can cut and bind in good shape more wheat than two men can set up.

We noticed by the Brooklyn Exponent that C. S. Vaughn contemplates a trip to England, and will undoubtedly start soon.

The Sons of Temperance of this place will give a grand picnic at Sand Lake on the 28th inst. Music will be furnished by the Wheatland and Springville cornet bands. Let every one turn out and have a day of recreation.

Springville cornet band was out in full session Saturday evening. Will meet at Franklin center next Saturday evening, and will have an ice cream party at A. J. Evans, Brooklyn, on Saturday evening, July 29, to which everybody is invited.

Mr. & Mrs. Ezra Lewis of Brooklyn were the guests of W. J. Ayres on Tuesday last.

RIDGEWAY.

Miss Kittie Clark is quite sick.

Our "Lord Roscoe" has moved to Blissfield.

Frank Pocklington ought to have been credited a girl baby two weeks ago.

Rev. Mr. McIlwain, of Clinton, will lecture before the temperance alliance here the last Sabbath evening of the present month.

Geo. Pocklington, who received a sun stroke some days since is but again, but has not fully regained his health.

Alphonzo Sutton is working for the Wabash, having been given the night office at La Otto, Ind., the crossing of the G., R. & I. R. R.

Warlike indications are frequently [illegible] resulting from a certain cow at large.

During the past week Frank Temple has been practicing that familiar ode, "by oh, by lullaby baby." We have not heard, but expect he does it like an old hand.

Solomon Smith has met with another needless loss on account of his penuriousness. He has no confidence in his friends or banks of deposits, but prefers to hide his lucre. A day or two since he bethought him to examine a deposit of $2200 which he had secreted in the barn, but was unable to find a piece as large as his finger nail, it having been appropriated for a mouse nest.

Preparation is being made quite extensively for the organ concert to be given next Tuesday evening. It will be the event of the season for our people. No pains will be spared to make the entertainment a grand success. With tickets at 25c each and family tickets for $1, all to go to organ fund, the attendance will likely be large. The instrument is expected this week and will be placed in position as soon as possible.

Last Monday evening quite a large and enthusiastic gathering from Ridgeway and vicinity accepted an invitation to a reception given by I. S. Osborn at his palatial residence, in honor of Miss Foote, a cousin from New York. The hospitality extended could not be excelled. The music furnished by the Misses Hall and Barlow was first class. A good time was enjoyed by all.

A fire in a livery stable at Chicago, early on Sunday morning, caused the suffocation of fifty-eight horses and a cow. The upper portion of the building was occupied as a boarding-house. Three men leaped out of windows, while three women were rescued by firemen.

Two Pictures.

BY MRS. J. OLIVER SMITH.

I.

The story runs, that once on artist came
Before the greatest master, all elate
With ardent glowing hope, that soon or late
His name in gold shine upon the page of fame.
Three snow-white lilies fresh with morning dew
Stood on the master's desk. "Take these, my son,
And paint them true to nature, one by one,
But let one-half the white be Heaven's own blue."
Now it were naught to grasp the blue of Heaven;
And mingle with each petal's gleaming snow,
Then emerald leaf, and lid the canvas glow,
But, "true to nature," was the mandate given.
A thought flashed o'er him—paint a vase of blue
And shed the golden sunlight streaming through!
"Well done," the master said; "your skill is shown; Henceforth your shine shall stand beside my own."

II.

A poet youth, whom disappointment's fang
Had sadly torn, this old-time story read.
"My inspiration this shall be," he said.
"Brave, earnest labor shall subdue the pang."
And so, fair pictures were conceived again,
And rays of thought were blended. Truth the blue,
With love's prismatic colors streaming through,
On flowers of hope that spring from ground of pain.
Then, aught of step, the master's home he sought,
Joy holding him entranced. 'Twould please the sage,
For soul and heart were on the glowing page.
Alas, 'twas but the eye of scorn it brought!
"Nay, come not near," he said in accents cold,
"Youth is not manhood—youth is ever bold!"
"Then all is lost!" the fearless youth replied,
And on the very threshold sank and died.

III.

Beside his tomb there stood in after years,
A brother bard of noble heart and mien,
Who felt for others in their joy and pain;
And bending down, his cheeks all wet with tears,
He said, "How might that soul have blessed mankind
Were not men's eyes to living genius blind!"
And as a solace to the heart bereft,
Upon the marble these grand words he left:
"To the quick brow Fame grudges her best wreath
"While the quick heart to enjoy it throbs beneath;
"On the dead forehead's sculptured marble shower,
"Lo, her choice crown—its flowers are also stone!"

NELLIE'S BANNER SCREEN.

"Nellie, Cousin Nellie, I say! Have you not done that banner screen yet?" cried Maud Lester.

"And Cousin Nellie, don't forget my letter in the package," said Vera.

"Nor mine, Nellie darling!" piped Dora, the youngest of Doctor Lester's four pretty daughters. "There they are all three letters; and there are two notes for you, by-the-by. One is from Brother Robert, I think. I cannot imagine why he should write to you, though. The other is a circular, or something of that kind. They will keep till you finish that, won't they, dear? I do so long to see it completed. Good-bye!"

Dora danced away after her two sisters.

Nellie Garston, her orphan-cousin, paused a moment in her work and took up one of the letters—the one that Dora had ascribed to her brother Robert.

"In trouble again, I daresay, for the hundredth time, and wishes me to break it to Uncle Martin," she thought. "I wonder what uncle would say if the girls should attempt to go on as Robert does for a single day?"

Before she had time to look at the superscription of the letter, a deferential servant stood before her.

"If you please, Miss Nellie, the housekeeper wishes to speak with you."

"Tell Mrs. Jenkins I will be with her in a few minutes," said Nellie, quietly. "Ask her if she will not be seated in the housekeeper's room, and see if the wedding-cake looks right? She wanted the other young ladies to come, too; but she never sent me upstairs until they were gone. And she says she shall go clean out of her mind if you don't come at once."

"I will be there directly, Louisa," said Nellie, putting down her letter on the edge of her tiny embroidery frame.

Very fair, and sweet, and girlish she looked, as she ran down to Mrs. Jenkin's sanctum, with that pleasant smile upon her face. But hers was a happy and a sunshiny heart. She had been adopted, a penniless, lonely orphan, by her uncle; and she considered no sacrifice too great to make to insure his comfort, or the welfare of any member of his family.

"But for uncle, I might have been starving and homeless to-day," she told herself now, as she glided through the flower-decked house. "I ought to do everything the girls wish, and if I thought Dora was really in earnest when she raves so about Mr. Vernon—But she is not, of course. I need not make myself unhappy by drawing back from his offers of friendship until her heart is far more engaged than it is now. I wonder if he will come this evening? And what could it have been that he would only tell me here at home?"

It was the eve of her eldest cousin's wedding. Ethel, a joyous, handsome brunette, was the first of all the sisterhood to be wooed and won. As she married a wealthy merchant, some thirty years her senior, whose whole future life would be spent in ministering to her lightest fancies, her friends naturally overhelmed her with presents of the most expensive kind. Nellie of course could not afford anything that would cost money, but for several weeks past every moment of her spare time had been employed in the elaboration of a most tastefully-designed banner screen, and when she had duly admired the wedding-cake, that Mrs. Jenkins would allow no one but herself to touch, hurried back to finish the embroidery, and then put the delicate work away.

It was nearly dusk when she took it from its frame. She placed the farewell letters of the sisters in its centre, and summoned a servant to see it properly packed and delivered to the bride's lady's-maid.

Then she went wearily upstairs to dress for dinner, reserving Robert's letter for the morrow.

"Happy will be the girl whom he does choose! Not because he is so rich, but because he is so good," she said to herself, as she entered the great drawing-room with the bridal party, at the appointed hour; and saw, as she half-expected, that Mr. Vernon's eyes were earnestly fixed upon her.

But even as she glanced shyly back from beneath her golden lashes at him, his face darkened suddenly, and grew proud and stern.

He turned away with an abrupt movement, and began to talk to a fashionably attired young lady, with whose name, for the last year, society had often linked his own.

Through the outpouring of congratulations which followed the ceremony, he bore his part gaily and composedly. Only when he found himself beside Nellie, he would stiffen into an icy coldness, that repelled and defied the least attempt at enquiry or explanation on her part.

In such a case, what can a woman do? She can only hold her peace, and suffer, patiently or impatiently, according to her nature.

Nellie was patient, but very, very sad. She saw George Vernon depart without even attempting to speak to her. Her heart bled inwardly, but she made no sign.

Neither then, nor at any time during the long, weary, miserable year that followed after Ethel's wedding, did he explain his conduct, which, it seemed to her, was not only strange, but also insulting in the extreme.

The time dragged on for Nellie, but for her three cousins it moved at happy, golden speed. One wedding, it is said, makes many. And certainly Ethel's three pretty bridesmaids were all engaged within that year.

When Ethel returned, to keep her anniversary, preparations for the three bridals were in progress to her great delight.

"And our modest little Nellie here might have been the fourth bride, but for me and that unlucky banner screen she made me," said Ethel, on the first evening when George Vernon called.

They were alone in the boudoir with Nellie, who was writing a letter for Ethel at her request.

Nellie started, and looked up at her cousin.

"Yes, dear. You never will forgive me," said Mrs. Tracy, holding up a sealed envelope. "I was stupid enough though it turned out a lucky accident—to tear the lining of your banner screen last week, and in it I found this letter, addressed to you."

"I remember," said Nellie, quietly. "Cousin Robert's letter. I never could find it. I was so hurried at the last. It was on the frame, and must have slipped into the lining as I took it off."

"I say nothing as to the writer," observed Mrs. Tracy. "Mr. Vernon, will you give this to Nellie, or shall I?"

He took it from her hand, polite but puzzled. One glance at the unbroken seal, and then, with flushed face and flushing eyes, he sprang to his feet.

"Oh, Nellie! how wretched I have been this year past, and all for nothing. I wrote this letter—I asked you in it to be my wife. If you consented, you were to wear a white rose in your hair that morning. You did not wear it—I thought you scorned my offer."

"Was that the reason why you looked at me so?—why you have been so—so unkind all through this wretched year?" faltered Nellie. "But I never saw the letter till now."

"My darling, forgive me!" cried George, clasping her in his arms. "I had heard that you were fond of your Cousin Robert, and after that evening I believed it. How could I know that my letter was stitched up in some piece of——"

"Take care! Respect the banner screen!" said Mrs. Tracy, laughing heartily. "My poor Nellie! I guessed all this the moment I saw that precious epistle, and ever since I came home I've been scheming to bring you two together, with only me to witness your reconciliation. And now I'll leave you, for a woman like myself is only in her proper place when superintending the arrangements for wedding number four. Take my advice, and name the same day that the girls have chosen, Nellie!"

Nellie did take it, and was happy ever after.

Smell for Smell.

Among the leading medical specialists of the French capital is a fashionable physician who professes to cure all the ills that flesh is heir to by "olfactory treatment," and is, moreover, renowned for making his patients "pay through the nose" for his advice. A pleasant little story is told of this eccentric doctor and of a wealthy Briton who, not long ago, crossed the Channel on purpose to consult him. Having asked his visitor a few curt questions respecting his symptoms, and subjected him to careful auscultation, the doctor extracted a bottle from a drawer in his writing-table, uncorked it, and handed it to the Englishman with the words, "Smell it!" adding, as soon as his command had been obeyed, "That is well. You are cured." Whatever surprise the patient may have inwardly experienced at being relieved of his malady with such astounding promptitude and ease, he is said to have exhibited no external sign of amazement, but, adopting the laconic style of his professional adviser, to have ejaculated, "How much?" "A thousand francs," was the reply; whereupon, producing a bank-note to that amount from his pocket-book, the imperturbable Britisher held it under the doctor's nose for a few seconds, saying, "Smell it!" The astonished Æsculapius mechanically complied. "That is well. You are paid," calmly observed the Englishman, pocketing the note; "I have the honor to wish you a very good morning!"

A Big Cattle Farm.

The ranches of Cattle King Powers, all making up a river frontage of eighteen miles, and including a number of very productive meadows, are situated on the south side of the Arkansas, and all are under fence. Directly opposite these, beginning at Fort Lyon, and reaching down the river twenty-one miles, and extending back far enough to include an expanse of seventy thousand acres, is another pasture under fence, the titles for which are in the same name. Here, then, are forty miles of water front and one hundred thousand acres of pasture under fence, all owned by one man. The fencing on these ranches will sum up over one hundred miles. Northward to and even beyond the Kansas Pacific and southward to Cimarron and beyond, into the panhandle of Texas, graze his cattle, more than twelve thousand in number.

Krupp's New Gun.

The Most Powerful Weapon Yet Invented

The Germans seem determined to be ahead of this or any other country in their practical efforts toward the adoption of every new idea in scientific warfare that will give them power in Europe, says the London Engineering. Once more Herr Krupp has come to the front. This enterprising inventor of warlike material has recently conducted a series of experiments with a new kind of gun or shell. The gun is on the muzzle pivoting system, and the shell has been specially designed for torpedo effect, that is, to burst on penetration of armored ships with a result similar to the explosion of a torpedo. Herr Krupp's recent experiments at Meppen were considered to be highly satisfactory, and quite sufficient to justify the great German manufacturer of weapons in taking immediate measures for the production of larger guns and shells than those tried.

The gun experimented with was of 21-centimeter caliber, with a long shell having a tremendous bursting charge, so arranged that the shell should explode only after penetrating some distance into the armor plating. The gun's muzzle pivot is carried down into a socket fixed in the hold of the vessel in such a way as to prevent the slightest recoil even with the heaviest charge. Herr Krupp's gun was worked during the trials with great ease and certainty of aim, and obtained for the shot very high velocity. This description of weapon has been designed for gunboats built to carry guns up to forty centimeters. These gunboats are to be of light draught, high rate of speed, and exceedingly handy. In fact, two or even three of such armed boats would be very ugly customers for a first-class armored ship to cope with, owing to their rapid power of maneuvering and their small size rendering them difficult to hit. Their cost would be but an eighth or a tenth of a first-class iron-clad. The Germans are certainly a very practical race. A good idea once conceived and well considered in all its bearings, they then do not take very long to work it out. We shall hear more ere long of Herr Krupp's muzzle-pivoting guns and torpedo shells.

Lay Preachers.

The Living Church comments in the following pointed manner on a species of holy buffoonery which, to our mind, is utterly disgusting. We quite agree with it in these strictures: "An exchange tells, it says, that 'Ben Hogan,' the converted prize fighter, has written a book which is very peculiar. It opens with one of his sermons, which has this queer beginning: 'Fellers, Ladies, and Feller-Christians, I come here to-night to tell you the truth, and you bet I am going to give it to you.' It is very strange that it does not occur to all decent people that such exhibitions are disgusting in themselves, and in no way to the credit of any parties concerned, or to any denomination that encourages them. This case of Hogan is not an exceptional one. If it were it would not be worth speaking of; but it is a well-known fact that all over the country such people no sooner get religion than they begin putting it to such use. It is announced that Mr. Toney Tinker, the barber, has been converted. Then he tells his experience.' It is the first thing that he is put to after getting religion. At once he begins to delight a class of morbid religionists with a fine assortment of frames, feelings, assurances, experiences, and what not of the most approved order. And these men always have 'a bright experience.' They never do any thing by halves. It is always a clearly-marked, pronounced case. They are trophies. They are made much of. They are not permitted to retire to private life. They are thrust to the fore front. No Indian could be more proud of his scalps than the professional revivalists is of his 'converted' gambler or prize-fighter. The man who has never been a prize-fighter or gambler is as nothing in comparison. As star differeth from star in glory, so also do these differ from ordinary and respectable men. They must mount the rostrum and the pulpit, and reprove, rebuke, exhort, and tell what they were and are, and how they 'got religion,' and what a 'bright experience' they have had. Seriously, this whole business of amateur preaching is to the discredit of religion, and to the dishonor of all concerned."

Foreign Advertising.

An Italian desirous of securing English custom has opened a hotel at Pompeii, known as the Hotel de Bellevue, and his advertisement reads as follows:

"That hotel open since a few days is renowned for cleanness of apartments and linen, for exactness of service and for excellence of the true French cookery. Being situated at proximity with regeneration it will be propitious to receive families whatever, which shall desire to reside alternatively into this town to visit the monuments newly found and to breathe thither the salubrity of the air. The establishment will avail to all the travelers visitors of that sepulcity and to the visitors (willing to draw antiquities) a great disorder and expensive contour of the Iron-whay. People will find equally thither complete sortment of strange wines, and of the kingdom, hot and cold baths, stables and coach-houses, the whole with very moderate prices. Now all the application and endeavors of the host will tend always to correspond to the tastes and desires of their customers, which will acquire without doubt to him into that town the reputation whom he is ambitious."

Clannishness in the Jewish refugees is one of the great obstacles that the Hebrew Immigrant Society in New York have to encounter. Germans and Swedes are willing to be separated from their families and fellows. They will go anywhere to get work. Not so with the Jewish refugees. They want to be together and away from other people.—Hence the difficulty in finding them places to work."

Deadheads.

The following just remarks on the subject of deadheads are taken from Forney's Progress: With what are called "deadheads," in general, over the railroads and at the theatre, I have nothing to do, the present purpose being to prove, if possible—the truth of two propositions:

1st. That no other business is so preyed upon by "deadheads" as that of journalism, and

2d. That the most accomplished and successful of the deadheads, which afflict the newspaper offices, are the railroads and then the theatres.

In proportion to the expense involved in its preparation, no article is so cheaply supplied as the newspaper. Its cost to its readers is as near nothing as it could well be, and to make a living profit, to its owners it must look elsewhere for a revenue than to its subscription list. That, in many establishments, is a positive loss regarded by itself, but the circulation attracts the advertiser, and the advertiser furnishes the sinews of war. To get the advertiser you must first get the circulation, and to get the circulation you must give the people a paper that will please and interest them. Every line which a newspaper publishes for any other reason than that its editor thinks it contains something the people wish to know, is more or less an injury to him, because it occupies space which otherwise would be filled with matter which would aid in building up or retaining the popularity of his journal. To this must be added the cost of putting the "puff" in type and the other outlays it requires. The wise newspaper proprietor limits the number of columns to which he will admit advertisements, or increase his columns to accommodate a rush, knowing that to crowd the reading matter though it may temporarily make happy the heart of his cashier, means speedy and permanent ruin. Yet there is not a newspaper in the country which does not give away in the course of a year many columns of its valuable space—a trite, but true expression—and more than that, places these gratis notices in positions which the money of the legitimate advertiser, paid down over the counter, could not buy. The people who ask these notices, and who are offended if they do not get them, are legion, but no class approaches anywhere near the rapacity of the railroads and theatres. If other newspaper advertisers received free notice in the same proportion as do railroads and theatres, there would be room for nothing else. And not only are the railroads and theatres granted these free notices, but in many cases their paid advertisements are inserted for much less than the regular rates. I do not refer to the so-called criticism of plays and the "attention called" to the change of time-tables on the railroads, which may go under the head of matters of interest to the public, though they are of advantage in every instance to the road or house of which they speak, but to the preliminary puffs of plays, notices of the improvements along the line, etc., which are never paid for, which are a source of expense in the newspapers, and oftentimes necessitate the omission of news. Why, you may ask, do the newspapers submit to this imposition? Clearly, the affair is in their own hands. Ah, gentle reader, you do not know the ways of the railroad and the theatre men? They must other advertiser ever dreamed of. If one newspaper denies what they ask, another one will grant it, and away may go the advertisements from the sheet of the bold journalist. There are a certain order of advertisements which some newspapers cannot afford to be without, and among these are the cards of railroads and theatres, and this, not because of the money they bring in, but because they are supposed to establish in the minds of other advertisers, from whom fair prices can be had, that the circulation is of some account. Those who control these advertisements are of course aware of this, and presume upon it to compel acquiescence in their demands for the free insertion of this, that and the other.

Important Events.

Name some of the most important events that happened in American history.

1620. Landing made on Plymouth Rock.
1621. First Thanksgiving Day kept; no turkey.
1622. First meeting-house built.
1640. First printing-press.
1648. Witches first hung.
1649. Men are commanded to wear short hair.
1662. More witches hung in Salem.
1702. Yale College founded in New Haven.
1704. First newspaper printed at Boston.
1705. Coffee is tasted.
1705. Tea is tried, but taxation makes it costly.

Professor Whitney does not lay any weight on the removal of forests as a cause of the dry and desolation of former fertile and populous regions of the earth. He admits that the greater proportion of land to water in late geological eras may have a little to do with the decreased rain-fall, but he attributes the diminished precipitation mainly to a lowering of the intensity of solar radiation during geological time.

"Father, you are an awful brave man?" said a Detroit youth, as he smoothed down the old man's gray locks the other evening. "How do you know that, Willie?" "Oh, I heard some men down at the store say that you killed thousands of soldiers during the war." "Me? Why, I was a beef contractor for the army!" "Yes, that's what they said!" exclaimed young innocence, as he slid for the kitchen.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

Industrial Brevities.

Oxford Down sheep are being bought in England for crossing on merinos raised in Germany and designed for the production of mutton.

More than a million dollars have been paid for potatoes imported from Germany and Scotland during the present year, and a considerable amount of beef shipped from New York to Europe has been brought back here for consumption.

The answers to the circulars recently issued by the bureau of industries show that there are 20,000,000 acres of land occupied in Ontario, and of these about 10,250,000 are cleared and cultivated. About 1,130,000 acres are sown with fall wheat.

Silk worms have been introduced into Spain from Japan. It is said that they live and do well in the open air, and feed mostly on the leaves of the live oak. The industry has been fostered by a Catholic priest who is a distinguished naturalist.

Livery men in New England towns say that the extending use of the telephone is doing much harm to their business, as many persons who were accustomed to hire teams to transact business in adjoining places now stay at home to talk through the wire.

Washington county, Pennsylvania, produces annually 2,500,000 to 3,000,000 pounds of wool, worth in cash $1,000,000 for the wool alone, besides the sale of fine sheep for breeding purposes, and mutton sheep and lambs for the meat markets of the east.

Within a radius of eight miles in one locality in Florida there are 2,992 orange groves containing 165,235 trees, which produce 2,500,000 oranges yearly, although only 5 per cent. of the trees are bearing. In the entire state it is estimated that 50,000,000 oranges are produced yearly.

The hop-growers of central New York have grumbled so much about the prospect for short crops that dealers have come to disregard their statements. This year, however, there is really cause for alarm. The open winter injured or killed many vines, and a new insect has destroyed the roots of the plants.

The next ensilage congress will be held in the city of New York, Tuesday, July 24, 1883. The object in making this announcement so early is that farmers may be prepared with accurate statements of their various operations by actual weight and measurement of the seed, fertilizers, products and land, and be able to give for the common good, exact results in a concise form.

Horticulturists commonly expect fruit of inferior flavor from moist soils. The cells are longer and filled with water. On the same hill-slope in Germany three qualities of wine are produced, and the variation is wholly owing to difference in the soil. Marshal P. Wilder states that in the famous vineyard of Johannisberg, which he had visited, the wine grown at the top of the hill brings $10 per bottle; half way down, $5, and at the foot of the hill, only 2 francs per bottle.

A gentleman residing near the coal-fields in Nova Scotia writes: I think, at the least calculation, there are from 1,500 to 2,000 coal-miners short in the Nova Scotia and Cape Breton collieries, and we have at present the best demand for coals we have had for the past ten years—in fact, the mines to-day cannot supply their orders. Coal-cutters in this province are paid for getting 50 to 75 cents per ton, and can find employment at from 50 to 75 cents per day.

A curious experiment, according to the Paris newspapers, has recently been made with wine in that city. A current of electricity was passed through a small cask of sour wine, and at the end of a few days the wine was found to be greatly improved in quality and to have acquired that flavor which has hitherto been supposed to come of age. It is said that the discovery of this new maturing process is owing to the accident of a thunderstorm having greatly improved a cask of bad wine in the cellars of a vintner at Carcassone.

Marshes and Malaria.

The opinion, formerly so prevalent, that malaria exists only, or chiefly, in marshy soil appears to be successfully combated by Professor Tommassi, who cites as evidence not only that the Campagna of Rome is not really marshy, but that, speaking roughly, two-thirds of the malaria-stricken districts of Italy are situated on heights. He refers to the well-known fact, that sometimes the surface of these districts is completely dry during the summer, but the production of malaria in them goes on just the same, provided they are kept moist below the surface by special conditions of the subsoil, and the air can reach the moist strata by pores or crevices in the surface.

The investigation made by M. Tommassi and others further show, that the direct action of the oxygen of the air is so necessary to the development of the microscopic plant to which the malaria is due, that the most pestilential marshes become innocuous when the soil is completely covered by water; pavements, buildings, and the like, may act in the same way, and arrest the development of the plant by cutting off the necessary supply of oxygen—but if, even after the lapse of years or of centuries, communication with the outer air is restored, while the other conditions remain the same, the soil recovers its noxious properties.

Death, according to the physicians, is generally "as painless as a fall through air;" but this don't help matters any. A man falling through air can hardly be expected to enjoy the pleasant sensation when he don't know where he is going to strike.

What They Lead To.

Kidney troubles and Liver troubles, unless checked in time by Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," will end in Constipation, Piles, Rheumatism, and Gravel. The latter are ailments of very serious character. "Favorite Remedy" acts upon the disordered Kidneys and Liver with quickness and certainty. It is Nature's own device for this purpose. Ask for it when you are next in the store, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable. Price $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

One Experience from Many.

I had been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

Back Ache

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain, in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

KING OF THE BLOOD.

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a Common Eruption to the Worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.

It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

ITS NAME IS ITS BEST DESCRIPTION as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons, and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 40 to 50 doses. Sold by dealers in medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you, as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

D. RANSOM, SON & CO., Proprietors,
Buffalo, N. Y.

The Purest and Best Medicine ever Made.

A combination of Hops, Buchu, Mandrake and Dandelion, with all the best and most curative properties of all other Bitters, make the greatest Blood Purifier, Liver Regulator, and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth.

No disease can possibly long exist where Hop Bitters are used, so varied and perfect are their operations.

They give new life and vigor to the aged and infirm.

To all whose employments cause irregularity of the bowels or urinary organs, or who require an Appetizer, Tonic and mild Stimulant, Hop Bitters are invaluable, without intoxicating.

No matter what your feelings or symptoms are what the disease or ailment is use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once. It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

$500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help. Do not suffer or let your friends suffer, but use and urge them to use Hop Bitters.

Remember, Hop Bitters is no vile, drugged drunken nostrum, but the Purest and Best Medicine ever made; the "INVALIDS FRIEND and HOPE" and no person or family should be without them.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for Drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco and narcotics. All sold by druggists. Send for Circular. Hop Bitters Mfg. Co., Rochester, N. Y. and Toronto, Ont.

Found at Last.

An agreeable dressing for the hair, that will stop its falling, has been long sought for. Parker's Hair Balsam, distinguished for its purity, fully supplies this want.

Domestic Recipes.

Waffles.—Take one quart of flour, add a pint of milk and a half a cup of softened butter. Beat thoroughly, and add another pint of milk, a little salt, a teaspoonful of sugar and three tablespoonsful of distillery yeast, or twice as much home made. Beat till the mass blisters, and set in a warm place at night to rise. In the morning add two well-beaten eggs, and let the batter rise half an hour. Bake in hot waffle-irons, and butter the cakes as soon as they are baked. Serve at once.

Strawberry Short-Cake.—Take two teacups of sour milk and a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda; when dissolved add one cup of butter or lard, and flour enough to make a soft dough; roll in thin cakes large enough to fill the pan in which they are to be baked. Dust a frying-pan with flour, place in the cake, and bake over the fire, turning as soon as the under side is done. Split the cake while hot, and butter well. Lay on a plate one-half cake, and put on a layer of well-sugared strawberries; put on another half, then more strawberries, and so on, until there are six layers; then serve.

Baked Tomatoes.—Wash, wipe and cut the tomatoes in halves, and place them in a baking-pan with the skin downward; season with pepper and salt; bake in a hot oven until tender; then take up carefully, and serve on toast with a bit of butter on each tomato.

Brook Trout.—Split nearly to the tail, wash and clean well, and fold together again. Let them lie wrapped singly in a clean dry towel for a few minutes. Dredge with flour and salt, and put in a pan with fresh, sweet lard, which should be hot, but not burning. Do not turn until brown enough for the table. One of the most essential things in serving trout or fish of any kind, is to have every thing hot and quickly dished, so that all may go to the table at once.

Roast Beef and Round Potatoes.—Roast the meat in the usual manner, and about half an hour before taking it out, pour off three-quarters of the gravy from the dripping-pan, and lay about the meat some balls of mashed potatoes, worked smooth, with pepper, salt, and a raw egg, moulded in your hands, and rolled in flour. Turn as they brown, and, when done, drain off the grease, and dish with the beef.

Boiled Macaroni.—Break half a pound of macaroni into short pieces, and cook about twenty minutes in salted, boiling water. It should be clear at the edges, but not ragged. Drain well, pepper and salt, and stir in a tablespoonful of butter. Strew grated cheese over the top when dished, and pass more with it at table.

Green Peas.—Cook from twenty to twenty-five minutes in boiling water with a little salt; drain well when tender, stir in a great lump of peppered butter, and serve hot in a vegetable dish.

In buying fish one test appears to all, whether large or small. If fresh the eyes are full and clear, the fins are stiff, and the skin and scales bright. If the eyes are dim and sunken it is not fit for use, and no protestation from the fishman should induce one to buy.

To remove sunburn and freckles and beautify the skin, put a quantity of elder flowers into a jug, pour boiling water on them, let the mixture stand for twenty-four hours, and strain through muslin. Wash the face with this every morning.

Marry a Gentleman.

Not a few complain of the miseries of married life. They forget that they enjoy as much happiness as their natures would have procured in any other condition. Even ambition cannot jump a man over his limitations. The married life is one in which both husband and wife should heed this maxim: "Happiness grows at our own fireside, and is not to be picked in strangers' gardens." If they don't, they will be apt to see the point of the following humorous stanza:

"My dear, what makes you always yawn?"
The wife exclaimed, her temper gone,
"Is home so dull and dreary?"
"Not so, my love," he said. "Not so;
But man and wife are one, you know;
And when alone I'm weary!"

A writer in Woman at Work advises girls, if they would be happy in the married life, to marry a gentleman. He thus defines what he means by the term:

A true gentleman is generous and unselfish. He regards another's happiness and welfare as well as his own. You will see the trait running through all his actions. A man who is a bear at home among his sisters and discourteous to his mother is just the man to avoid when you come to the great question which is to be answered yes or no.

A man may be ever so rustic in his early surroundings, if he is a true gentleman he will not bring a blush to your cheek in any society by his absurd behavior.

There is an instinctive politeness inherent in such a character, which everywhere commands respect and makes its owner pass for what he is—one of nature's noblemen.

Do not despair, girls; there are such men still in the world. You need not at all die maids. But wait until the princes pass by. No harm in a delay.

You will not be apt to find him in the ball-room, and I know he will never be seen walking up from the liquor-saloon. Nor is he a champion billiard-player.

He has not time to become a "champion," for he has had too much honest, earnest work to do in the world. I have always observed that these "champions" were seldom good for much else.

Be very wary in choosing, girls, when so much is at stake. Do not mistake a passing fancy for undying love. Marry in haste rarely ends well.

The Doctor's Last Happy Resort.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 11, 1882.

I recently had a very difficult case of Consumption. I treated it in the most scientific manner possible, but to no effect; patient grew gradually worse. Rather than give up, and as a last resort, I decided, much against my wish, to use a remedy that had cured one of my former patients.—Greatly to my surprise, the patient began to gain, and in a much shorter time than I dared to ever expect, she was completely cured. The name of this remarkable remedy is Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. I now use it altogether in my practice.—Leading M. D., Evansville.

THE ALUMNI REUNION.

ANNUAL MEETING AT THE OPERA HOUSE, FRIDAY JUNE 30th.

The History and Oration, Election of Officers, &c., for the Coming Year.

The Alumni Society of the High School held their regular annual reunion at the Opera House on Friday evening, June 30th. Although the program was minus a poem, still it was a very creditable one indeed, and was listened to by a fair sized audience. Owing to the absence of so many of the regular corps of officers the usual supper was dispensed with. The meeting was called to order by the President pro tem, Mr. Abner Wilson, after which the exercises were presented in the following order:

Prayer—Rev. R. S. Pardington.
Inst. Solo—Florence Shepard.
Address of Welcome—S. C. Stacy.
Response—Jennie Nyland.
Inst. Duet—cornet and piano—Fred VanCamp and Jennie Root.
Oration—L. Cass Miller.
Inst. Duet—cornet and piano—Fred VanCamp and Jennie Root.
Essay—Etta Wilson.
History—Mrs. H. S. Lee.
Benediction—Rev. C. E. Conley.

The music was exceptionably good. Miss Shepard received hearty applause for her solo, and the first cornet and piano duet called forth a rousing encore. The history by Mrs. H. S. Lee and the oration by L. Cass Miller of the Howell Republican, are given below in full. Miss Etta Wilson's modesty prevents the publication of the essay.

At the close of the exercises a business conference was held in which a goodly number of the Alumni participated. It was resolved that an effort should be made to celebrate more extensively next year, that the secretary should notify all officers of their positions at least one month before the Reunion, and that all members of the Society be notified by postal card of the date of the meeting. Below is the list of officers chosen:

President—L. M. Ide.
1st Vice—Chas. Waldron.
2nd " —Miss Cora DePuy.
3rd " —Miss Elida James.
Secretary—Miss Etta Wilson.
Treasurer—David McNair.
Orator—John B. Whelan.
Alternate—Albertus E. Palmer.
Essayist—Miss Manie Monaghan.
Alternate—Miss Jennie Frazer.
Poetess—Miss Dena Heesen.
Alternate—Albert L. Arner.
Historian—Miss Grace Parkhurst.
Alternate—Miss Luella Waring.
Toast Master—Guernsey P. Waring.
Ex. Com.—Chas. A. Waldron, Abner Wilson, P. S. McKinnon, Seaton Anderson, S. C. Stacy.

The History.

MRS. AUGUSTA P. LEE.

Lives of graduates remind us
That we too have had our turn,
Left our dog-eared books behind us,
Done our level best to learn;
And, though not with such great glory
Have we ended our school days,
As the graduates of late years,
Still we feel that schoolin' pays.

The biographical sketches of our Alumni presented by the various historians of past years have brought us down to 1866. Of the class of that year, all but two have been already traced for you. It numbered eight, C. B. Thomas, Principal. Of the two remaining, Chas. A. Cook went soon from here to Ann Arbor, took a partial course, remained there two years and received a diploma. Went next to Quincy, taught there some time, also editing the leading paper of the town; thence to Leslie where he taught seven years, studied law and was admitted to the bar. He is now Principal of the school at Dexter.

Nellie J. Beers belonged more properly to the class of '65, but for some reason failed to graduate with them. She married Lavern I. Bidwell of this place, also one of our alumni, in May, 1866. Prof. Thomas urged her so strongly to graduate, knowing that she was so fully prepared, that after some hesitation she did so, and received her diploma with the class of '66. Of more than ordinary abilities, amiable and warm hearted, her life, spent among us, speaks for itself. And when in February, 1871, further promotion came and she was called "to go up higher," the sadness in the hearts of all who knew and loved her was mitigated by the knowledge of the infinite gain to her.

Of the class of '67, numbering nine, three have been written up. John D. Chambers is next upon the list. After graduating here he took the full medical course at our university, which occupied him two years. He then practiced a short time in Freedom, then removed to Fort Wayne, where he has built up an extensive and very successful practice.

V. S. Miller went to Ypsilanti from here. A friend has kindly collected these minutes of his career, so far, for me. "He remained at Ypsilanti until '72, then taught at Dundee, was afterwards head of the North Branch schools for three successive years. Was in journalism nearly two years, is now practicing law at North Branch, Lapeer Co. A bachelor still, although seriously contemplating the matrimonial state under three or four tempting occasions." We might add under sufficient provocation.

Sara L. Train taught school some time, was married in Sept., 1873, to Chas. Davis of Franklin, where she still resides fulfilling her mission as a happy wife and mother.

Ella Schreder commenced teaching the fall after graduating and continued to do so, even after failing health had warned her to rest. After struggling two years with that fearful disease, consumption, she died in Dec., 1875.

Rosa McKinney also commenced teaching soon after graduation. She taught three years in the country, then came into one of our ward schools and remained until June, 1876. In October of the same year she was married to Mr. Adelbert Mills, also of Tecumseh. She has spent her life here, knowing it was the best place to stay in.

Miss Georgia Frink I can hear little of. As the result of inquiry I can only obtain this information. "She married somebody and lives up north somewhere." Later on I hear that the somebody was a Mr. Jackson, the somewhere is still indefinite.

The class of '68, H. H. Drury, Principal, numbered eleven; two of them have already been—(I'll have to make a word, historanized, I guess.) After graduating here J. Romeyn Miller went to the State Normal School, graduating from there in '74. Went to Manchester and taught there 4 years; since has been at Constantine, Mich., teaching. In August, '77, was married to Miss Hattie Clark of Ridgeway, of the class of '75.

Through the kindness and courtesy of a friend the following sketch of Cornelius Waring's career was obtained: At the close of school life he mingled farming with teaching for a year or two, then took up telegraphy, first occupying the office at Tecumseh, since which he has received a series of promotions, and is now the chief train dispatcher on the Chicago and West Michigan Railroad. He still belongs to that deluded class who suppose that the greatest enjoyment of life lies in the line of single blessedness. However a reform may be expected any time. He seems open to conviction.

Lewis M. Waldron taught school for a time after graduating, he then engaged in the grocery business for a few years; is at present home at his father's. I endeavored to obtain more definite information but he failed to reply to my card of inquiry.

Josie Landon went east to Connecticut the summer after graduating, and remained a year or two with her sister, then came home again. In the fall of 1872 she was married to Mr. George Stillson who took her to his home in South Norwalk, Conn., where she still resides.

After finishing her general course Mary Anderson took a special one in music at the Adrian college, obtaining a diploma at the end of two years. In the fall of 1880 she went to New York city to avail herself of the great advantages of culture, both by hearing the finest artists and obtaining instruction from the best masters. She spent the winter and spring there; is now teaching music and has charge of the organ at the Baptist church in this place.

Cora De Puy spent three years in teaching, after graduating. For the last few years she has been engaged in literary work. She is known to many friends under the nom de plume of Pearl Diamond, and is reporter for several of the leading daily papers of the state. She has set her mark high and means her friends to hear from her often.

Alice Adair is at her home in Utica in this state. She writes me she is unmarried, has taught four years in Warren, fourteen miles from Detroit, and five years and a-half in the union school at Utica. The past three years she has devoted to music and free hand drawing, which she will probably continue.

Sena P. Drew's life has moved on quietly. She spent six months in New York in '77; came back to Tecumseh, then went to New York again four years, stayed two years at that time, but is now home again. She says Tecumseh is the nicest place to live in she knows, and I'm sure we all agree with her.

Ella Randall went east to Vienna, N. Y. soon after her graduation, where she remained until Dec. 1871, when Mr. Seaton Anderson, of the class of '66, brought her back to Tecumseh, where she has lived since.

Ida Burroughs really belonged to this class, having studied with them and fully prepared for graduation, but she was suddenly summoned to Iowa, and not returning in time has never cared to join another class. It is said that she has been wonderfully successful canvassing with a book she had in Iowa, thus showing great force of character.

I hope I have not wearied you with this summary and brief glimpse into the present lives of these of our Alumni. It seemed best that the classes should be brought up, as they had inadvertently been broken in upon; this must be my apology for presenting so many to you. Of course there must be necessarily much repetition, but it is very pleasant to find the most of our friends happily situated and thus I leave them and you.

The Student vs. The Citizen.

L. CASS MILLER.

MEMBERS OF THE ALUMNI:—We have assembled to-night in accordance with a time honored custom, a custom quite generally observed in the states, but perhaps nowhere more than in Michigan. We come together in the interests of education—an institution that was planted in America contemporaneously with the setting of Pilgrim feet on Plymouth Rock. We turn aside from our usual cares and avocations to pay an hour's tribute to the Alumni society represented here, and to welcome to our ranks the ten who but yesterday brought their High School life to a triumphant close.—How fit at this season of the year, when blessings and benedictions are rising like sweet incense from the schools of almost every city, village and hamlet of the land, that the Alumni and friends of the Tecumseh High School, should be thus assembled in happy reminiscence and pleasant communion. How forcibly does this occasion call to our minds the time, nearly eighteen years ago, when it was the writer's good fortune to become associated with the public schools of this place, and to have the honor, two years thereafter, of graduating in a class of nine—two ladies and seven gentlemen—who formed the first class which completed the regular High School course of study. This course was mapped out by that beloved teacher and superintendent, Prof. Cyrus B. Thomas, now superintendent of the Saginaw City schools. It is unnecessary, ladies and gentlemen, to state to you to-night that after an interval spanning these busy and all too rapidly passing years it affords genuine pleasure to revisit our common Alma Mater; gives hearty enjoyment to return to this place, endeared by so many sacred associations, to live over again, at least for a brief interval, a segment of the fondest recollections of by-gone days. How vivid in memory is that first day of school spent in this town and within yonder walls; how clear to recollection that first, long examination before admission could be granted; how difficult and almost endless seemed the road over which every student must travel to complete a full course of study. But encouraged and assisted at each successive step by such teachers as the Lawton's, the Thomases, the Rundells, the Barneys, the Gilberts, the Sharpes, the Halls, the Rosenroughs, and their equals, (the like of whom are rarely found in the same school at the same time,) there was no such thing as halting, for their spirit was as inspiring as it was catching, and the energetic student, like the determined and successful general all on fire with a purpose, forgets doubt and laughs at difficulties. All felt the invigorating influence and kindly impulses of faithful teachers and were stimulated to redoubled interest and enthusiasm. Every incident, every object, every face and place to our minds had its peculiar attachment and importance and made its personal impression. Standing before our school house only today what a flood of memories were awakened. Even the sensless brick and mortar forming partition and wall to us have a history; its floors are yet resounding with familiar footsteps; its walls echo and re-echo the incidents and capers of other days; its seats suggest hours of hard study and anxious care, as well as absorbing frolic and fun; its blackboards speak of grammatical, mathematical, philosophical and rhetorical victory or defeat. Along its halls and stairways, as of yesterday, we note the long line of boys and girls ascending and descending—now to the chapel above and then to appropriate rooms below, guarded by a faculty sentinel at every angle lest the pent up mischief in truant boys should find sudden vent, and notwithstanding all an occasional form would come swooping down past line and sentry and after a most brilliant flight, making perhaps at a single bound a whole story, would land on the floor below and from thence on terra firma, and thence to go fishing or swimming. Such antics, you know, are not forgotten by boys; nor did the boys forget that a day of reckoning speedily came to all offenders of the school law. In those days there were "options" as well as in these. They were in the hands of a monopoly, a selected few—the teachers of course—and a "corner" could easily be put up on the unsuspecting student at any time. Hence it was that stocks of this latter class were very soon undesirable, and even became a drug in the Tecumseh High School market.

But time passes swiftly on, especially does it in happy school days. Two, three or four years are as a dream when it is passed. Writing essays, speaking pieces and term examinations with all their attendant trepidations are realized in the most uncomfortable degree, and last of all comes graduation. Essays and speeches befitting an august event are prepared. The day of days arrives, schoolmates, classmates and teachers, bound by many tender ties, are saddened as the day of separation approaches, for from that time henceforth the pathway of each must unceasingly diverge. And thus the sequel has proven. Two of the fairest and best of that class that graduated on that eventful day in June, 1866, two well known and highly respected and dearly beloved members, belonging to your beautiful town, have gone to that bourne from which no traveler returns, and where to them abiding hope has turned to sweet fruition. The seven members living are filling honorable stations, either as wife, mother, farmer, banker, merchant, teacher or journalist; and some of whom go in and out before this community from day to day, while others occasionally visit your streets for brief intervals, and then disappear, lost it may be to sight but never we trust to memory.

What has been said of the class of '66 can with slight modification be said of the fourteen classes that have succeeded it. The incidents and history of one are substantially the incidents and history of all. Including the present class there are one hundred and nine graduates who have been sent forth from your halls of learning during these 16 years. Added to these are the names of Anderson, Adams, Bills, Boyd, Brewer, Bidwell, Burridge, Bangs, Cheever, Clarkson, Crane, Graves, Gilbert, Hendricks, Hall, Henry, Helm, Hamilton, Hewitt, Kneeland, LeBaron, McNair, Mark, Osborn, Perry, Stacy, Sherman, Slayton, Smeltzer, Satterthwaite, Tindall, VanVleet, Waring, Wastell and hosts of others whose names we don't at present recall, but which would be an honor to any school with which they were connected. Hundreds of others have received a primary, intermediate and grammar school training here, and have been stimulated to nobler manhood and womanhood and inspired with grander purposes for having drank at its fountains.

But the scene changes—the student and the school are lost to view, while the fathers, mothers, and citizens are substituted. The rollicking days of youth and the school give way to more earnest and serious maturity; the ideal in the school must be supplanted by the real in actual life; theory must merge into practice, and the student passes from the narrow limits of the school room into the realms of a state. At a single bound he is taken from his theoretical center and transplanted in the great practical school of the world, in which the teachers, the studies, the objects, the influences all change, and if the principles themselves do not change their application certainly does. Often bewildered and confused he stands still and wonders why the world cannot appreciate him and his attainments. The change he meets is a radical one. In a word it is now more a matter of bread than books.

Now, we have great respect for the system of education that obtains at present, and has in the past, in this state and throughout our country; but if we can interpret the signs of the times, the day is not far distant when a more practical system will be developed—one that is more in accord with the spirit and demands of this time.—The age is decidedly utilitarian; it is of small use to discuss the question whether it is properly so or not. The fact that it is so is patent to the most casual observer. Moreover the tendency in all trades and professions to-day is toward subdivision of labor, leaving each branch to the care of specialists trained to unusual perfection in one particular department.—There was a time when a general education fitted its possessor to take good rank among teachers. Now, a man or woman who wishes to attain any distinction whatever must have large attainments in special branches, in addition to general information. In the medical profession we have our eminent specialists, also in the legal and scientific fraternities, and while from all these comes the cry, "Do some one thing well", the demand is taken up, repeated, and re-echoed with ever increasing emphasis by the great army of merchants, bankers and tradesmen of the country.

The popular demand has been that our young men should be taught as much as possible of a great many things. We have given them some science, some language, some philosophy, some literature, and have tried to give them just as much of each as they could possibly assimilate—many times more, so that they were literally crammed with abstract and detached information. When they get through their course they scan the busy world about them, looking for a suitable niche for themselves, and find it too true that "they know a little of everything, and not much of anything." In fact they are just ready to begin to learn some special thing to earn a livelihood. The result is they turn their eyes toward professional study as the natural sequence of their high school course, and our professions are crowded with many an one who has missed his vocation, while our trades and farms are too often left to those of limited education, and consequently more or less incompetent. We say incompetent because it is certainly true that those who have been taught to think for themselves and whose minds have been cultivated will be far more competent in any industry than those who have had no such mental discipline. Hence we endorse and reiterate every argument put forth as a plea for the education of all, from the highest to the lowest. But the question is, are our public schools of to-day running under a system that accords with public sentiment of to-day? We think not, and we have attempted very briefly to point out what to us seems an imperfection. Let us now consider some means that may be corrective in character.

In the first place our present system attempts too much. As this point is often referred to and discussed we will not dwell upon it, simply insisting upon the fact that the mind, like the body, grows only upon what is assimilated and digested, and the further fact that mental dyspepsia is just as possible as physical. If the practical bearing of study is to be taken more into account—as it certainly must be soon—room must be made for it, and courses adopted looking to that end.—This will necessitate a rearrangement of courses.

Perhaps the reason that the higher mathematical studies occupy so prominent a place in our present courses of study is the doctrine that whatever is bad to take is good for the patient, for it is a notorious fact that few love mathematical studies, and fewer still thoroughly master the higher branches or reap marked benefit from them. Much has been said against the study of the classics, especially the so-called 'dead languages', but these are at least necessary in the professions and their use in the public schools can be defended as greatly more beneficial than algebra, for while they give equal mental discipline, they cultivate language and expression and give increased command of it. Let enough of arithmetic be taught to acquaint and familiarize the student with every problem and principle met in the exigencies of every day experience, and in place of the higher mathematics let botany, natural philosophy, geology, chemistry, political economy, civil law, &c., be substituted. Of course we have these studies now somewhere, but bring them on sooner in the course so that the boys and girls who form the 'people's college' in this country to-day can have the benefit of them, leaving those who can take extended courses to spend their time in those things necessary to their future designs, but not so necessary to those looking forward to practical business life. Our third point is to have more practical teaching in school-room, counting-room, garden, field and forest. Thus, if the teacher will take pains to collect actual data that occurs every day in business circles, it will add interest to the class exercise, and if made a prominent feature of the term's work, and not forgotten in the examinations, the study of arithmetic would become a great every day assistant.—In the study of book-keeping also there is chance for improvement. It is a common remark among merchants that book-keeping in the schools is of small use, and that the practice in the store is a very different affair.

We venture the assertion that not one student in ten in the average high school can enumerate the public officials in their own county and state, together with the time and manner of their election, salary, &c. The same is true of the members of both houses of the state legislature, and perhaps of congressmen and senators. The constitution of the state and United States is an unknown instrument to most of our young men. But space forbids further illustration. As a final suggestion we would associate practical labor with what is known as abstract study. The mind and body should grow and expand together. It is as necessary to develop vigorous, healthy bodies as it is to cultivate the mind, for what is mental power without bodily strength? Boston has a school of this character and obtains from it excellent results. The manual labor department is no novel feature at Cornell University, and even Michigan has fallen into line. More modern developments of the same idea are taking shape in the way of departments for trades of all kinds to men, and the girls are taught millinery, dress-making, cookery and practical instruction in a vast number of household duties. The want of educated labor is felt everywhere and hence the increasing number of technical schools, and the growing demand for them.

Thus briefly have we pointed out what in our judgment are defects in our school system, and suggested possible improvements. Much can be done by teachers to accomplish this result but the most potent lever in this country is public sentiment, and is for us, Alumni of High Schools, and citizens of this state enjoying its great advantages to agitate and continue to agitate, until the most progressive towns, like this beloved village of Tecumseh, which is usually in fore front of reform, shall incorporate some new and distinctively practical features into their school system. So, by willingness to see and remove defects, and a determination to employ only broad and practical teachers, they being backed by a healthful public sentiment, shall our school system of Michigan maintain its proud position of being the first of the land.

Rev. M. P. Remington, Ithaca, N. Y., writes "From too close application to my calling, my health underwent a severe strain. I felt a weakness in every part of my body. My digestion especially failed me, and my nerves became all unstrung. Recreation did not do me proper benefit. Finally, on the recommendation of a brother minister, I tried Brown's Iron Bitters. It has made me feel better and stronger than I have before felt since I was a young man."

Wilbur Sayers, aged 23, a Saginaw City street car driver, suicided last week by shooting himself through the body. Cause not known.

Colorless and Cold.—A young girl deeply regretted that she was so colorless and cold. Her face was too white and her hands and feet felt as though the blood did not circulate. After one bottle of Hop Bitters had been taken she was the rosiest and healthiest girl in the town, with a vivacity and cheerfulness of mind gratifying to her friends.

A Dublin cablegram states that thirteen counties will be proclaimed under the repression act.

There is good authority for the statement that President Arthur will veto the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The first bank to extend its charter under the new law was the First National, of Findlay, O.

The bill to extend the charters of national banks has received the signature of President Arthur. In accordance with its provisions, Secretary Folger, has issued to holders of continued bonds a circular announcing that on August 1 such securities will be received in exchange for registered 3 per cents bearing interest from that date.

William Sprague purchased a case of rifles in Providence and had them delivered at the office of the Aquidneck company, and sent out an employe to buy two hundred pounds of ammunition. It is only a few weeks since a receiver appointed by the court was forcibly ejected from the mills, with threats of shooting.

The people of Washington have a new dread of imprisonment in the jail, as a story is in circulation that Guiteau's ghost walks the corridors after midnight. On the roof of the medical museum, each day, can be seen a negro under an umbrella watching the bones of the assassin as they lie drying in the sun.

A band of forty Apaches attacked the town of Globe, Arizona, last Friday, and were repulsed in a fight which lasted half an hour. Four companies of the 3d cavalry have gone in pursuit from Fort Thomas. The raiders are the renegades who killed Charles Colvig, the chief of scouts, reinforced by twenty members of the White Mountain band.

The widow of Abraham Lincoln died at Springfield, Ill., Sunday evening. There were no alarming symptoms in her case until Saturday. Late that night she was stricken with apoplectic paralysis, and uttered her last words: "I am dying." She was the daughter of Hon. R. S. Todd, of Lexington, Ky., and was in her 64th year. She was married in November, 1842. Secretary Lincoln is her only living child.

Thomas Egan, who murdered his wife, was executed Thursday at Sioux Falls, Dakota. Once the noose broke, with a report like a percussion cap; then the trap was sprung while the rope was being arranged, but the third attempt at hanging was successful. In the grave with the murderer were placed the board and rope with which he killed his wife.

The candidates on the independent republican ticket in Pennsylvania have addressed a letter to the Cameron nominees, saying that some of the propositions made would produce harmony in the party, and urging the withdrawal of both tickets, all the candidates to pledge themselves not to accept another nomination, a new convention to be held under the rules of the recent conference. A reply within a week is asked.

A cablegram Friday announced the arrest of the brothers O'Flaherty in Ireland on charge of complicity in the assassination of Cavendish and Burke. One of the suspected men is Mathias O'Flaherty, of London, Ont., who was at home when the murders were committed, and for two weeks subsequently. The other is Cornelius O'Flaherty, of Chicago, an engineer on the Northwestern road. Their trip was taken to improve the health of the latter, who is consumptive. These facts have been sent to the Irish executive.

It seems impossible that a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., should make so many and such great cures as Hop Bitters do; but when old and young, rich and poor, pastor and doctor, lawyer and editor, all testify to having been cured by them, you must believe and try them yourself, and doubt no longer.

WORK is rushing on the Patterson Block. The new stores will be ready for occupancy by the first of September.

A FEW friends of Misses Bertha and Grace DeWolf were very pleasantly entertained at their home last evening.

WILL ATEN is home on a vacation. Will has a good chance in Brooklyn, and we can safely say, he will improve it.

JOHN F. HICKS has been taking a few days' respite from business and is starting work upon his new house on Union street.

MRS. E. B. WOOD and Miss Clara Hayden gave their respective Sunday school classes a day at Sand lake, Tuesday of this week.

THE Southern Michigan Medical Society will hold its next annual meeting in the court house at Hillsdale, Mich., on Tuesday, July 25, 1882.

ED HOUGH again smiles on Tecumseh friends. We are glad to learn that Ed has decided to remain, having purchased an interest in a good business here.

MISS ELIDA JAMES entertained a party of young people, very pleasantly, last Friday evening, in honor of her guest Miss Lina Weller, of Troy, Ohio.

WE have received from W. H. Brearley a sample of a little plant known as "Sand Wort" which grows among the rocks upon the summit of Mt. Washington.

WE understand that Perry Hosmer and Ed Hough have formed a copartnership and bought the Jewelry and book store of J. H. Sherrard. The Stock is now being invoiced.

The Adrian Times is threatened with a libel suit. The Times has been improving of late very decidedly and it is now trying to put on metropolitan airs by donning a libel suit.

THE Hamilton Times of last Monday says: "John R. Clark, the impassioned Anglo-Yankee orator of Michigan spoke and sang at two meetings at the tent to twenty-two hundred people.

A LITTLE daughter of Mr. Quire met with quite a severe accident last week. While playing on the porch she lost her balance and fell to the ground breaking her arm. At present she is doing nicely.

THE dwelling house of Joseph Russell, in the western part of the town, caught fire last Sunday and was entirely consumed, nothing being saved but a few articles of household furniture. The fire caught from a defective stovepipe.

THE Detroit, Grand Haven and Milwaukee Railway have issued a neat pamphlet entitled "Go as you please," in which the advantages of this route are fully set forth. It contains many fine illustrations and is a very attractive advertisement.

MR. ED. CLARK of Clinton has accepted a clerkship in Sink's Hotel. We congratulate Mr. Sink in obtaining the service of Mr. Clark as he is the right man in the right place. Sink has also another man as Assistant clerk, a Mr. John Rogers.

MR. JOHN DAVENPORT, of Iowa, for many years proprietor of the Evans Lake Hotel, arrived in town yesterday and will spend a few days reviving old acquaintance in Tecumseh and Franklin. The years seem to rest lightly upon his shoulders as he looks no older than he did twenty years ago.

MR. JAMES MCKINNEY, who died of heart disease on the 11th inst., has resided in this village for over twenty years. He was a man of quiet, unobstrusive disposition, content to remain in the humbler walks of life, but he was none the less an honorable man and useful citizen. Within the circle of his personal friendships he will be sadly missed.

OWING to an accident that befell our pasting machine, we are obliged to send out the HERALD this week uncut and unpasted. It will give our readers a chance to see how they like the old style.

JOHN HAYNES, our present night watchman, intends going to Detroit the first of September, to take a course of study in the Medical School. John has made an efficient officer and we regret very much his departure, yet we wish him the success he is truly deserving of, and hope sometime to again welcome him among us.

THE harvesters and binders are rushed to their utmost capacity this week. The heavy grain has caused trouble with some of the binders, but some of them are overcoming all obstacles and working very nicely. Better weather for harvest is rarely seen than we have had during the week thus far.

WILLIAM LEIGH formerly of Windsor, Ontario, has purchased the bakery heretofore run by Chas. Semidt in the Kennedy block, and will take possession at once. In addition to a full line of baker's breads and pastry he will keep confectionery, ice cream and lemonade, and will endeavor to keep a model establishment in his line. Mr. Leigh has had experience in this branch of business and ought to succeed in building up a good trade

YESTERDAY afternoon at the residence of the bride's parents in this village, Miss Mary Frazer became Mrs. C. A. Wright. A few relatives and personal friends were present at the ceremony, and the high contracting parties left on the afternoon train for a tour through the state of New York. The bride has been a teacher in our public schools for some time past, and the groom is numbered among the most prominent of our younger business men. May peace, plenty and prosperity attend them.

THE young ladies of Tecumseh have long been agitating the question of a ladies' brass band. They have enterprise and talent in that direction and we are certain of their success. They held a meeting last Monday evening, elected officers and apportioned parts as follows:

President—Lola Monaghan.
Treasurer—Louisa Phelps.
Secretary—Gertie Hause.
E flat cornet—Gertie Hause.
B " " —May DeWolfe.
Alto—Allie Satterthwaite.
2nd Alto—Myra Reynolds.

TECUMSEH, July 3d, 1882.

EDITOR HERALD:

On the 27th of May, 1880, I met with an accident dislocating the knee joint and otherwise seriously injuring it, which rendered me quite helpless. I remained in that condition nearly a year when I applied to Dr. Catlin who on Nov. 3d, 1881, performed an operation that resulted favorably, as I have steadily improved since that time, and am now able to walk without the aid of a crutch or cane, and am confident that I shall soon be restored to perfect health. And I would express my gratitude to Drs. S. and H. Catlin who so skillfully and kindly managed the case.

MRS. W. B. ROWLAND.

CAN WOMEN VOTE?

It is true that they cannot vote in Michigan at a general election, but it is true also that any woman owning property liable to assessment for school taxes in any school district can vote in the school meetings in said district. We give below the provisions of law on this subject. Under these provisions there are several women in Tecumseh who could vote at our school meetings, and we should be pleased to see them exercise the privilege.

SESSION LAWS 1881.

No person, except an elector, as aforesaid, shall be eligible to any elective office contemplated in this chapter; Provided, however, That any female person of or above the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in this State three months, and in the township ten days next preceding any election shall be eligible to the office of school inspector.

Every person of the age of twenty-one years, who has property liable to assessment for school taxes in any school district, and who has resided therein three months next preceding any school meeting held in said district, or who has resided three months next preceding such meeting on any territory belonging to such district at the time of holding said meeting, shall be a qualified voter in said meeting upon all questions, and all other persons who are twenty-one years of age, and are the parents or legal guardians of any children included in the school census of the district, and who have, for three months as aforesaid been residents in said district or upon any territory belonging thereto at the time of holding any school meeting, shall be entitled to vote on all questions arising in said district which do not directly involve the raising of money by tax.

Any qualified voter in a school district who has property liable to assessment for school taxes shall be eligible to election or appointment to office in such school district, unless such person be an alien.

TELEPHONE TALK.

The poles are all up and the wire stretched for our local exchange, and the instruments are now being placed. Some trouble was experienced in getting through some of the streets on account of the heavy shade trees which line the sidewalks. The lines were located upon those streets having few shade trees, as far as possible, and where the trees were heavy on both sides of the street the line has been run across the street at intervals. It was impossible to prevent the cutting of shade trees except by this method.

The Tecumseh office will be kept open for business from 7 A.M. continuously through the day until 9 P.M. Arrangements will be made, as soon as the local exchange is in complete running order to have a boy sleep in the office and to have a night bell, so that calls may be answered at any time during the night.

Below is a list of the local subscribers in Tecumseh up to date. Several more have favorably considered the matter, and are expected to take instruments at an early day.

A REAL NECESSITY.

We presume there is hardly a lady to be found in our broad land who, if she does not already possess a sewing machine, expects some day to become the owner of one.

The household of a young wife is now considered incomplete without a sewing machine.

Next to her lover the thought uppermost in the mind of the maiden just blooming into womanhood is a sewing machine.

When asked by her parents or affianced what her christmas or birthday present shall be, the answer in a majority of cases is, "A sewing machine."

But after the mind has been fully made up to purchase of these indispensable articles, the question arises as to what kind of a machine to buy.

It should be so simply constructed that the most inexperienced can successfully operate it. The other points mainly to be considered, and which are the most desirable, are durability, rapidity, capacity for work, ease of operation, regularity of motion, uniformity of tension, and silence while in operation.

The "Light Running New Home" fills the above requirements and is said to combine the good points of all other sewing machines; with the addition, of many new improvements and labor saving devices.

The price is no higher than that of other machines, and every lady who is the happy possessor of one may rest assured she has indeed a treasure.

All who send for the company's new illustrated catalogue and enclose their advertisement (printed on another page), will receive a set of fancy advertising novelties, of value to those collecting cards, &c. Their address is, New Home Sewing Machine Co., 30 Union Square, New York.

Hysteria, nervous, excitability, wasting of the muscles, impurity of the blood, quickly relieved by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

TWELFTH WEEK.

The world was sad—the garden was a wild,
And Man, the hermit, sighed—till woman smiled
CANTZONI.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbor'd by fruit of baser quality,
SHAKESPEARE, HENRY V.

"Young man," said Columbus, as he pushed his chair back from the breakfast table with such force as to knock the baby clean over Tiger and bump its little nose fearfully on the stove hearth, "I s'pose you'll want us to fool away a good part of this week at the garden truck. I want to give you my views on the subject and then you can paddle your own canoe when you choose. Gardenin', I say, is a humbug. Adam and Eve made a botch of it in the beginin' and it has never amounted to nothin' since. Where in canopy would agriculture swing to if all the farmers went to gardenin'? Here you've got one acre in strawberries, and half an acre in rawsberries, that land fooled away to raise seventy-five bushels o' peas. Strawberries is pretty good fodder for clerks and school children and milliners, that is true, but how many post holes would a man dig in a day livin' on strawberries? If a man has got a big farm and is out of dust, it is well enuff to have a patch o' strawberries to please the women folks, but a man who would raise strawberries or any other kind o' garden sass to make money out of ought to be sent to a lunatic asylum by the first express. As fur rawsberries they are an abomination. A man can't work in 'em without tearin' his hands and swearin' every other step. The strictest deacon in Lenawee county couldn't trim rawsberry bushes all day without backslidin', and then the effect they have on housekeepers is outrageous. Every woman who runs a family thinks she can't keep house without cannin' up from one to six bushel of rawsberries for sass. First you must buy the rawsberries, then the cans to put 'em in, and then sugar enuff to gingerbread the family plump six months to can 'em with. Rawsberries consume sugar faster than any vegetable I know of except pieplant and the neighbor's boys. You can quietly dig up the pieplant roots some dark night, and you can boot the neighbor's boys and send 'em home, but the Angel Gabriel himself couldn't persuade a woman to go without canned rawsberries. Rawsberries is doin' more to break up families than diptheria or the small-pox. If the man who raised the rawsberries made any money there might be a little excuse for it. Whiskey sellin' is a bad business fur the man who buys it, but the seller can make money to build nice houses and drive fast hosses and rent hundred dollar slips in the best churches with, whereas the ignoramus who raises rawsberries hasn't his own cloths, spoils his own temper, pitches a fire brand into his neighbor's family and raises the Old Harry generally. Now young man, take my advice, plow up your rawsberry patch and plant some late peas. It will be money—" Here the pet lamb tipped off the kitchen door-step into the swill barrel and Ichabod rushed out to rescue him. The Captain was soon hauled out and placed upon terra firma, when Ichabod treated him to such a good old-fashioned booting as made Ellie turn fairly green with envy.

Monday, June 20th.—Commenced picking strawberries to-day. Had Ellie look up a lot of good little red headed girls and boys to do the picking and had him oversee them. Columbus counted the boxes and paid off the pickers at night. The rest of his spare time he devoted to cultivating potatoes. The bugs had eaten the tops entirely off the potatoes, but Ichabod says if the ground is kept well stirred the roots will grow just as well. He has warranted a mess of new potatoes for the Fourth, sure, even if he has to borrow them of the neighbors.

Tuesday, June 21st.—Got five hundred pounds of mill-feed for the cows. The dry weather of the past few days has shortened up the pasture to such an extent as to reduce the daily butter crop very perceptibly. The family must have butter, while the baby, the two calves and the Captain must have milk, so I thought it economy to lay in a good supply of fine middlings for the cows. Ellie tended the berry pickers. Columbus hilled up the potatoes. He turned a good furrow on top of each row with a plow, then took a garden trowel and dug a hole where the tops ought to be, then knocked the bottom off some earthern flower pots and set one pot over each potato hill, then tied some fly netting over each flower pot, then sprinkled the netting with London Purple. If this treatment succeeds I shall apply for a patent on it. Ichabod hilled up two rows of potatoes during the day and they were hilled up to stay too.

Wednesday, June 22d.—Columbus hilled up two more rows of potatoes. Ellie tended the pickers. Little Tommy Breed found a bumble bees' nest and was stung in the face till his eyes swelled shut. This drove the pickers out of the patch for the day. I sent Ellie to Clinton for a professional beekeeper who came down in the afternoon and moved the bumble bees' nest. He only charged five dollars for the job.

Thursday, June 23d.—Columbus hilled up two more rows of potatoes. Ellie spent the forenoon hunting for pickers. The news of yesterday's episode had spread through the village and the good little boys and girls all went up to Gilman's this morning to pick for him. Ellie however found some women who wished to pick on shares, so that the berries were secured before night.

Friday, June 24th.—Columbus and Ellie trimmed raspberry bushes today, cutting out the old wood and leaving the bearing stalks. Ichabod got ten slivers in his left thumb and lost the rivet out of the pruning shears. He went to town and got a new pair of shears with handles four feet in length, and a pair of buckskin pantaloons. After dinner they got along better.

Saturday, June 25th.—It rained all day, which was a God-send for the pasture lot. Ellie took the horses to be shod and borrowed neighbor Hill's lumber wagon to use in the hay next week. Columbus put a courtplaster on his sore thumb, curried off the Captain, greased the green phaeton, put two new sections on the mowing bar, gave orders to Ellie to clean out the water tank, emptied the chips out of the sitting room wood-box, made a new bung-hole for the vinegar barrel, and eat up all the old scraps of ginger bread which his wife had been saving to feed the first brood of chickens with.

Industrial Brevities.

The culture of carp is receiving more attention in Iowa than in any state in the union.

During the recent cyclone in Iowa lambs became as badly "mixed up" as the babies did in the famous opera of "Pinafore."

Washington county, Pennsylvania, is said to be the largest wool-growing county in the union, and to produce annually 2,500,000 to 3,000,000 pounds of wool, worth in cash $1,000,000.

At a fair held at Oxford, Pa., lately, a team whose united ages reached fifty-five years trotted a full mile close to $:00. One of them had lived a quarter of a century, and the other was five years his senior.

The managers of fairs in Great Britain derive revenue from several sources not recognized in this country. They charge exhibitors of implements for space, sell catalogues, receive pay for advertising in them, and impose fines on all persons who fail to make exhibitions after they have given notice of their intentions to do so.

The dairymen in the southern part of Wyoming county, New York, are agitated over a new weed called Long John, believed to be brought in western grass seed. It grows three feet high and has the appearance of a species of mustard. The cattle are extremely fond of it, but the milk from cows feeding upon it is worthless.

A place where bogus butter is manufactured has been discovered in Albany. It is said the very best dairymen can not tell the difference between it and the genuine article. One suspicious circumstance connected with its manufacture is that each tub is marked with the name of a person at "Canton, N. Y." where a superior article of butter is made.

In 1881 there was 134 firms engaged in silk manufacture in the canton of Zurich; the number in 1872 was 116. The work people and officials aggregate 49,816, and the wages paid them amounted to 19,815,453 francs, an average of about $16 a year. Many of the weavers, however, are unemployed in winter, and in the total of 49,816 some of the work-people have been reckoned twice over, as they are engaged in two different branches of the trade. The value of the fabrics produced in the year is estimated at £3,068,000.

Prof. Sheldon said that when in Canada he saw Mr. Ballantine, who told him he had found cheese made late in autumn did not ripen so well as that made in summer or spring, and when it did ripen its flavor lacked richness. He concluded that the temperature of the evening's milk sank too low, and having guarded against this result by heating the milk up to 80 degrees in the evening, and leaving it standing at that heat until it matured, his autumn cheese ripened without the least difficulty.

Early Maturity and the Teeth.

A young breeder asks whether animals that are said to mature early show this maturity in the teeth as well as in a precocious growth of the body at that age, or whether they still require the ordinary time of perfect development. In cases of real early maturity, the teeth are as far advanced as other indications of ripeness. Dr. Martin, of Kentucky, an intelligent breeder, made careful observations upon this point in his own herd, as well as among those of his neighbors, many years ago, and found that the best Short-horns had perfect teeth, or a full mouth, at three years old, while native cattle in the same region did not show the same maturity of teeth till five years old.

There were many objections to Dr. Martin's conclusions, and some doubts expressed as to the accuracy of his observations at the time, but they have been fully corroborated by many observers since.

Several years ago, the London Agricultural Gazette had a series of illustrations of the teeth of certain cattle, with the actual age stated, and remarked: "The permanent dentition is often completed in bulls of the most advanced type at three years of age, instead of five or six years, according to the old standard." This effect of early maturity applies to all our domestic animals used as food. Some English butchers have declared that their most particular customers preferred the meat of those earliest matured. This also reverses the strongly-expressed opinion that the highest quality of beef requires four years to mature. It is not probable that many animals, reared expressly for meat, will be kept beyond 31 months, a few years hence.—National Live-Stock Journal.

A Candid Land Agent.

A glib-talking land agent was presenting the merits of a certain tract of land. After he had exhausted himself, and could think of no more yarns to match what he had spun, he remarked, with a sigh, "I won't deceive you, gentlemen; there is a vegetable that cannot be grown there, and that is the pumpkin." "Why not?" they exclaimed. "Well, in the first place, the pumpkin is a great runner. It can distance the cucumber and the squash. To grow pumpkins it is necessary to build a high board fence around a tenacre lot to prevent the vines escaping into the next county, so rapidly do they grow on that soil; and if they be fenced in, they race around the lot all Summer trying to get out, and, of course, wear out the pumpkins dragging over the ground." That was enough. If any agent supposes that he can sell a New Englander land that will not raise pumpkins, he mistakes.

Fortunes for Farmers and Mechanics.

Thousands of dollars can be saved by using proper judgment in taking care of the health of yourself and family. If you are Billious, have sallow complexion, poor appetite, low and depressed spirits, and generally debilitated, do not delay a moment, but go at once and procure a bottle of those wonderful Electric Bitters, which never fail to cure, and that for the trifling sum of fifty cents.—Tribune.—Sold by all druggists at 50c.

Morsels of Gastronomy.

It is a wise man who knoweth whitebait when he is called upon to taste of it.

Frog legs, soft shell crabs, and sea snipe are now included in the luxuries of the season.

Francatelli is authority for the statement that the palate is as capable and nearly as worthy of education as the eye and the ear.

A scarcity of oranges of good size and quality is complained of, but lovers of lemonade will be glad to know that good lemons are plenty.

Epicures contend that the best way to eat asparagus is cold with a dressing of oil and vinegar. To eat it hot they declare to be an abomination.

Discussion upon the subject of drawn vs. undrawn poultry has subsided altogether. Nobody was victorious, and the sale of undrawn poultry goes bravely on.

"Show me a man eating lettuce," said Lord Beaconsfield, "and I will tell you what manner of a man he is." The highest epicurean authorities all agree that to cut lettuce is to ruin it.

Blanc mange of olden times was an altogether different dish from what we have now under that name, and used to include in its ingredients almost the whole gale.

If thar iz enny thing that will make a feller forget to wate for his sister, its the skool gurls. They learn boys to love flowers. I've seen sum go all over a fifteen aker field huntin daises and pepper grass and peach blossoms to ware on their coats just to look nice and giv um to the skool gurls. No town nor county cant afford to do without um. I believe in um—the skool gurls."—Elberton New South.

Scientific Item.

"That man is a phrenologist," said an Eastside citizen to a son of Erin, in reply to an inquiry regarding a long-haired individual who was just closing the door behind him. "A man that can tell, by feeling of your head what kind of a man you are," explained the obliging citizen. "Bumps on me head?" exclaimed Pat. "I should think it would give him more of an oides phat kind of a woman me wife is!" And then the much-abused Hibernian changed his pipe to the other corner of his mouth and walked out.—Yonkers Statesman.

What the Minister Says.

Homer, Ill.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

Jealousy.

Some poet has said that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, Jealousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. Jealousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

How to Hatch Full Broods.

A little care with sitting hens will enable the farmer to get full broods, if he will only take the trouble to select eggs that are fertile. The better method is to endeavor to place the eggs under two or three hens on the same day, as there are nearly always two or three inclined to sit about the same time when the flocks are large. Put not over a dozen eggs under each hen; in cold weather it is best not to give them over eight each. When the eggs have been in the nest about ten days or two weeks, go to all three of the nests and carry the eggs to the house. Then, by holding an egg in the left hand, and shading it with the right, between the eye and a good light (a coal-oil lamp will answer) the position of the air chamber at the top of the large end may be observed. If this has become enlarged, and the egg is very dark from the air chamber to the small end, the egg contains a chick. If the egg is clear or transparent it contains no life. After selecting the dark eggs shake each one gently, and if the fluid strikes loosely against the shell it is rotten, but if no motion in the egg is experienced by the hand place them back in the nest, and boil the clear ones for feeding young chickens already hatched. By using this plan the good eggs that were formerly under three hens can be placed under two, or one, as the exigency demands, and the third hen may be given another hatch along with a fresh trio. With a little judgment and experience one can know almost to a certainty how many chicks a hen will bring off.

Be Temperate.

When sickness or depression comes, do not buy "tonic bitters." It is better to die of disease than drunkenness. Buy a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" and cleanse the system. The great multitude of human ills have their foundation in impure blood. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" attacks these at the fountain's head and makes the stream of life pure. One Dollar per bottle. Dr. David Kennedy, Proprietor, Rondout, N. Y.

Shylock is still extant in Berlin. An impecunious schoolmaster applied to him for a loan the other day, but the security offered not being of the best class, he refused to advance the money till the applicant, who possesses a magnificent beard, signed a bond by which, in case of non-payment of the loan at the appointed date, Saylock would have the right to cut off one-half of the hirsute ornament, and the proprietor would not have the right to remove the remaining half. If they go to law over the bond, which is not unlikely, the judge need but consult Shakspeare for a precedent. It will be a hair-splitting case.

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that

95 Per Cent.

of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures while the unparalleled demand with which it meets stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it comes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.

IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,080.14. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of list and other information address GEO. P. A PLEASANT LETTER.

It Rings of a Grateful Heart and Gives Honor Where Honor is Due.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced everything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote and says: "I have had no pain for six months and I have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you Derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder, associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices Medicine and Surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Persons who have ever been connected with a newspaper have experienced the obituary nuisance, and will appreciate this bit of exaggeration spun by Charles Caverly, agent of the Universalist Publishing House: Mr. Caverly was speaking of the little knowledge clergymen had of the value of newspaper space, and among other anecdotes, related one of a minister who brought in about five columns of obituary for his deceased wife, which he desired to have published. Mr. C. told him he didn't feel that the paper could afford the space, nor that the public had five columns of tears for his wife; whereupon he proceeded to reduce it; but before he succeeded in getting it in proper shape and space he married again.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

It Was A Fast "Hoss."

How a Nag Beat a Thunder-Storm.

A prominent Waterbury "hoss" man was expatiating upon the speeding qualities of a fine horse to a prospective buyer, the other day. In reply to an interrogatory regarding the animal's "staying" qualities, he said: "Stay? Well, I guess he'll stay; and he'll keep his gait right up as long as you want to drive. I'll jest tell you about a drive I took from Danbury last summer. A drummer got left by the New England train, and come up to my stable to get some one to take him over. The boys were all busy, an' most o' the horses was out. John, as we call him, had been drove up to Bantam the day before, an' I hadn't let him that morning. I knew 'twas rough on the old fellow, but I knew't he was good for it, so I hitched up, an' we started. 'Twas a hilin' hot day, and dusty's fury; hadn't been no rain for a week, but we got to Danbury all right just after noon. I put John in the stable, an, after dinner I set out on the stoop to the Wooster House, smokin', and thinkin' I'd wait till the cool o' the day before I drove back. It seemed to git hotter'n hotter, an' we had to git in doors, an' set in the bar-room. Wal, I set there till after four o'clock, readin' a paper, an' drinkin' rum and ice-water, when I heard it thunder. I went out on the stoop, an' see there was a shower coming, so I ordered my hoss brought right out. Mr. Raymond tried his levelest to make me stay; said I'd git soaked through, an', like enough, git struck by lightnin'.—But I told him I'd got to git home that night, any how, an' if I started right off I'd git there ahead o' the shower.—You oughter a' heard him an' the other fellers laugh when I said that. Of course I didn't expect to do any thing of the sort, but I didn't know John so well then as I do now.

"When the hostler brought John around to the door the rain was a comin' whole water betwixt there an' Mill Plain, and we could hear the wind roarin' through the trees up back o' the fair ground. John, he knowed that suthin unusual was up, for he stood pawin', and a workin' his ears, an' kinder lookin' up to me, as much's to say, 'Old man, yer don't know how much of a hoss I be when I set about it;' an' I confess I didn't know.

"Wal, when I got in an' took up them reins the hail stones had begun to rattle on the kitchen roof to the hotel, an' the thunder-claps was tryin' to see which could make the most noise. I jest sung out to John to git, an' you may reckon he did git. Every time a fresh thunder-clap broke loose he seemed to take it as an argyment for him to go faster. I had the buggy top up when I started, but afore we'd gone a mile I had to let it down flat, for the air pressed into it so solid that I couldn't breathe. When we got into the holler jest t'other side o' Newtown, I looked over my shoulder, an' the wind was racin' down the hill not twenty rods behind, an' the gutters was runnin' full o' water, and when we got onto Newtown green the holler was six inches deep with water. When we went through the centre the houses looked as if they was all whirlin' round, and it sorter o' made me dizzy.

"John didn't seem to notice nothin', but kep' goin' faster'n faster till we jus flew down the hill through Sandy Hook. [illegible] an' I'll bet his belly wa'n't a foot from the ground. When we crossed the rubber-shop bridge I happened to think o' the toll-gate at Bennett's bridge, three miles ahead. I went to countin' out the change for toll, but afore I could git my purse into my pocket agin we come in sight of the bridge. I could see the gate was shut, but a woman was outdoors pickin' up some chips 'fore they got wet. She must 'a' thought we was a runaway, for she dropped an apern full o' chips an' flopped that gate open in less'n a quarter o' a second, an' just in the nick o' time to save John's jumpin' it. I tried to chuck the toll out, but all but three cents stuck on to my fingers jest by the force o' the wind—we was goin' that fast. John slowed a trifle crossin' the long bridge, 'cause he must o' seen the notice about fast drivin' stuck up at the end. But when we got off'n the planks we more'n made up for it. You'd 'a' thought we'd bin crawlin' before by the way we went now.—Up hill an' down we went a flukin', with the thunder roarin' an' hail an' rain rattlin' some o' the time not twenty feet behind.

"Jest afore we struck Southbury I heared a cracklin', and lookin' around I see what looked like a sky-rocket on the tellygraf wire, an' I knowed 'twas a streak o' lightnin' tryin' to ketch us.—Thinks I, 'John, old boy, you're beat now, sure;' but I just give a cluck, an' he doubled on his gait rite off. That streak tagged us to Southbury Centre, when it got sick o' the job, an' flew off onto the roof of Pulford's grocery.

"I noticed when John struck this last spurt that the slack o' the reins kept shortenin' up till I had to get on my knees an' reach over the dashboard to keep hold of 'em: them air traces had stretched nigh two feet, an' the whiffletree was bent up like a rainbow. I'd a had to've dropped the lines if I hadn't had a long tie-rein in the buggy, and spliced 'em out. We was flyin' so fast after leaving Southbury that the telegraph-poles on the country road looked like a solid fence, and all I could see of Middlebury was the top of the church steeple, which was higher'n the poles.

"Wal, sir, when I drove into this stable that thunder shower was laggin' along over by the Breakneck four corners. There was just five hailstuns in the back of the buggy that must 'a' got in when John slowed his gait on Bennett's bridge. What ails his mane, did you say? Same thing't ails my head; the friction o' the air took the hair all off at that time. That, sir, was drivin', that was, an' I've got the wealth that says John can do as well again."—Waterbury American.

Improvement for Mind and Body.

There is more strength-restoring power in a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids consequently find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body.—Commercial.

Screens With Artistic Decorations.

Since the introduction of the folding screen this article of furniture has become very popular. There are fire screens, light screens, screens for piazzas, screens for dining-rooms and for everywhere. They are not remarkably useful, but they are certainly exceedingly pretty. One of the most beautiful screens recently made was designed by a prominent artist of this city. It was in three panels, each representing a season in flowers. The first was a design wholly from the violets and early flowers of spring; the second showed a background the color of the blue skies of June, with golden lilies, sweet-peas, clover and roses; while the third panel was colored like the dun skies of November with a medley of scarlet maple leaves, red rose haws, asters, yellow daisies and sprays of cardinal flowers thrown against it. Some exquisite work is shown by an amateur on bolting cloth. This material is the last fine gauze through which the wheat flour passes before it is ready for the market. Two lovely panels are wrought on this material; in one spring flowers, violets, blue-eyed grass and a plant of spring beauty, with tremulous, creamy bells, grow at the front of the picture and a branch of dogwood tree and a blossoming vine hang overhead. "Earth in the pleasant spring thy beauty walks," is the legend written at the foot of the picture.

Handsome screens designed for country piazzas are of white china matting painted with flowers of fruit. These screens are very large. An exquisite one is painted with a trellis and grapevine, with green leaves and purple clusters of fruit. Another shows a vine of trumpet flower, with its long scarlet bells, which the humming birds love so well; the vine seems to clamber from one panel to the other, as it would were it actually growing over the screen. Other matting screens are decorated in separate panels with sunflowers, hollyhocks, locust and other flowers.—N. Y. Mail.

Editorial Squibs.

One of the curious features of the American press is the fondness of its editors for making fun of each other. A foreigner, on his introduction to our newspapers, would be apt to say, "Why, the fraternity is worse than a band of Ishmaelites! Each man's hand is against his brethren!" A better acquaintance, however, would teach him that these squibs, being used "in a Pickwickian sense," are but the harmless chafing of rivals, ambitious to make a "point" against each other. Singular as the fact may seem to us who are "to the manner born," Chambers' Journal has thought these pleasantries of sufficient importance to "sample" them for its readers. It says:

A California editor invested in a mule, and the fact was chronicled under the heading, "Remarkable instance of self-possession."

Said an Idaho journal, "The weather has been hot again for the last few days; the only relief we could get was to lie down on the Portland Herald, and cover ourselves with the Portland Bulletin—there is a great coolness between them."

A Michigan journalist declared in his paper that a certain editor had seven toes. The slandered man thereupon relieved his mind in a "leader," denouncing the statement as unwarranted, and its author as devoid of truth and a scoundrel to boot. The offending gentleman replied that he never wished it to be understood that all the seven toes were upon one foot.

When a Southern paper asked, "What is editorial courtesy?" a Northern journal replied, "Why, it is when a Southern editor is caught stealing chickens at midnight, and his brother editors kindly allude to the matter as a strange freak of somnambulism."

The proprietor of a Western journal announced his intention of spending fifty dollars on "a new head" for it. "Don't do it," advised a rival sheet; "better keep the money, and buy a new head for the editor." that gentleman being evidently, in its opinion, "a young man of frugal mental capacity," as an Oregan journalist delicately termed another.

Rest at Last.

Hurry and worry kill their tens of thousands of busy women. There comes before my mind, as I write, the care-worn faces of many disheartened housekeepers. Day after day passes, but still there is plenty of work on hand that ought to be done; in fact, it always seems to be increasing. The house must be kept perfectly clean, for dirt in the house is a sin (?). The children must be kept looking "as well other people's." The husband is too poor to hire help in the house, and ten chances to one the poor wife has to bear burdens that rightfully belong to him to bear. He does not mean to be unkind, but he does not know the pain she suffers in silence and he cannot realize the weakness which makes her work a burden. And so the years glide on, until mind and body can bear up under the fearful strain no longer. Then the toil-worn hands are folded, the throbbing, burning brain becomes cool, and the sufferer is laid to rest—rest at last. Why do so much unnecessary work? It is wrong to waste strength and time thus. There is a great deal of work done which never ought to be; it may seem necessary, but experience will teach you, if you will allow it to, that it is not. Constantly dwelling upon the one subject of house-work, the mind becomes morbidly sensitive, and trifles will rear themselves into mountains. This is a fact experience has taught me. The more work you do the more you will see to do. The more you brush and scour the more dirt you will see. There is a time to stop, and happy are they who know the time.

A Beneficent Action.

The miserable looks and feelings of those confined at desks or work tables are caused by weak Stomach, Kidneys or Bowels. Parker's Ginger Tonic without intoxicating has such a beneficient action on these organs and so cleanses the poisonous matters from the system, that rosy cheeks and good health are soon brought back again.—Express.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Senator Edmunds has written the president a letter urging that he veto the river and harbor appropriation of [illegible]

A trip to the Yellowstone national park is being arranged by Secretary Lincoln and General Sheridan, with a party of thirteen friends.

The judiciary committee of the house will make an adverse report on Mormon war claims for $130,000, which have been pending since 1859.

A bust of Garfield, from the photograph used on the five-cent postage stamp, has been completed by Preston Powers, of Florence, Italy, and is pronounced by the widow and mother of the president beyond criticism.

The United States fish commission has made a special report to congress, which will be the most exhaustive work on food fishes ever printed. It will make three quarto volumes of eight hundred pages each, and be profusely illustrated.

It is the intention of the tariff commission to arrange for hearing testimony with a view to saving time, and persons desiring to be heard will be notified of the time and place. Pres. Hayes may be addressed on the subject at Long Branch.

Congressman Townshend, of Illinois presides [illegible] the house during the consideration of the internal revenue bill, and consequently a prolonged session of congress. He hardly believes a sufficient number of members will be present to warrant the taking up of the contested election cases.

The senate finance committee has adopted an amendment to the internal revenue bill, changing the date from May, 1883, to October, 1882, when the provisions of the bill relating to stamps, taxes on bank checks, drafts, orders, vouchers, matches, and other articles embraced in the schedule shall go into effect.

There are eight hundred new places in the interior department provided for in the increase of clerks in the pension office. For these places there are already upon file the applications of four thousand people. The secretary of the interior declines to see anyone for the purpose of making a personal application. These appointments will be divided up among the republican members of congress and the commissioner of pensions.

Mr. Anthony from the committee on printing, has reported a bill to provide for the publication of reports on the tenth census. The bill provides for printing ten thousand copies of a complete series of the separate reports, twenty thousand copies of the report on population, twenty thousand copies of the report on agriculture, and ten thousand copies of the report on manufactures and mechanics, and appropriates $835,461 for this purpose.

Owing to insufficient appropriations, the national board of health will close the stations on the line of emigrant travel to the west. This action will involve the suspension of inland inspection of foreign emmigrants for the discovery and prevention of the transmission of small-pox at ten stations distributed on the trunk-line railways in the north, and the inspection of infected vessels arriving at our ports from yellow fever points abroad.

In the star-route trials an attachment was issued for ex-Senator Spencer. A letter was produced from one of the officers of the Overland Mail Transportation company, alleging that $35 had been paid to Postmaster Abbott, of Alvord, Oregon, to prevent him from making complaints to the postoffice department. It is probable that Senator Kellogg, of Louisiana, will be indicted soon by the District grand jury for connection with frauds on the postal service.

The division of statistics of the department of agriculture has been charged by congress with the collection and monthly publication of freight rates of railroad and steamboat lines for the information of farmers. These data will be useful and valuable to producers and shippers. It is believed at the department that general information concerning local prices and cost of shipment will tend to stimulate distribution of products, and will certainly aid the producer in determining whether the shipment of his surplus will result in cheerfully responding to the requests for information and promptly aiding in giving utility and value to the monthly publication.

It will be noticed that Mr. Homer Lee, an expert, who found the bond plates recently submitted in the Doyle case to be counterfeit, is a contractor with a steam printing-press for printing proofs from steel plates. Up to the present time there has been no way of printing from steel except by hand so as to produce an artistic or workmanlike proof. Mr. Homer Lee claims that he has a printing-press that will supplant hand machines. He has been working for a number of years to get this press employed in the bureau of engraving and printing. Now that he has come to the rescue of the bureau and taken its side in the case submitted to him by Secretary Folger, it is said that he is going to have, as a reward of his clear-sightedness, the contract for the use of his steam presses.

It is a well-known fact that big corporations and big schemers generally wait until the last weeks of congress to get their bills through congress. The object of this is to prevent debate on and investigation of the subject-matter. There is therefore a kind of suspicion about some of the bills that are to be passed under suspension of the rules this week. One of them, which has been reported from the Pacific railroad committee to authorize the organization of railroad companies in the territories, is declared editorially by the Sunday Capital to be the grandest land steal of the century. It says the real object of the bill is to confer on Jay Gould, C. P. Huntington, and their confederates, an everlasting monopoly of transportation across the continent. Robinson, of Ohio, who will move the passage of the bill, says that it "is a consolidation of continuous and connecting lines of the railroads, and affords increased facilities for the transportation of passengers and freight." He also announces this rather surprising proposition that expenditures show that consolidation is in the interest of the people and not of monopoly. The Capital says, in concluding a two column expose:

"Members of the house, even those most reckless of public opinion should pause before giving Gould and Huntington over fourteen millions acres of land for nothing—to give these monopolists thirty-five millions of the people's money while tens of thousands of workingmen are striking because the wages they receive will not buy the necessities of life. The average, per person, of western homesteads is not over twenty-eight acres, and this bill proposes to deprive over five hundred thousand men, women and children of free homes that $35,000,000 may be put in the pockets of Gould and Huntington besides binding the commerce of this country in bonds of iron and forcing it to pay tribute to these railway kings."

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JULY 10.—In the senate, Mr. Morrill reported the house bill reducing internal revenue taxation, with amendments cutting down the customs duties on sugars, steel rails, and manufactures from hoop, band, or scroll iron. The senate bill granting right of way through the Papago Indian reservation to Arizona Southern railroad was passed. The river and harbor bill was taken up. An amendment appropriating $500,000 for the reclamation of the Potomac flats was adopted by 32 to 7. Mr. Butler moved to make the item for Charleston harbor $500,000, and caused to be read a recommendation from General Gillmore, but the motion was rejected. An amendment was adopted authorizing the secretary of war to expend $25,000 in completing surveys of the ship canal to connect Chesapeake and Delaware bays. The committee rose. Mr. Plumb reported a bill to repeal all laws granting lands to the state of Missouri to aid in the extension of the Iron Mountain railroad.

JULY 11.—In the senate, Mr. Morrill made a favorable report on the bill to repeal the export duty on tobacco, and Mr. Groome reported an act to prevent the payment of double pensions. The conference report on the national bank charter bill was agreed to. The river and harbor bill was completed in committee of the whole, its amount being $20,024,136, and one or two feeble attempts at action upon it were made. Mr. Ingalls denounced the measure as infamous shame, scandal and disgrace. Mr. Butler observed that senators did not seem to expect to get away from Washington before the end of summer.

JULY 12.—In the senate, the river and harbor bill was taken up. On the Hennepin canal proposition Mr. Pendleton failed to secure the striking out of the words authorizing the location of the cut. The amendment appropriating $30,000 for completing surveys of the Chesapeake and Delaware ship canal was concurred in. The bill was then passed by 39 to [illegible]

JULY 13.—In the senate, Mr. Mahone reported back the house bill to establish a bureau of animal industry. Mr. Voorhees secured the adoption of a resolution to inquire into the expediency of purchasing and publishing the manuscripts of Andrew Jackson. A joint resolution was passed appropriating $50,000 toward American representation in the international fishery exhibition in London. A discussion as to the order of business called out campaign speeches from Messrs. Pendleton, Sherman, Beck, Windom, and Butler, when it was decided to take up the tax bill. Mr. Voorhees read a defense of General Hancock's attitude on the tariff issue while Mr. Call indulged in a refreshing nap, the senators hearing [illegible] was held.

JULY 14.—In the senate Mr. Hill reported back the bill to punish postmasters for making false certificates of the arrival or departure of mails. Bills were passed to increase $50 per month the pension granted to the widow of General Custer, and to give a like amount to the daughter of President Taylor. The internal revenue bill was taken up, and Mr. Bayard spoke for hours, showing that the cumbersome machinery of the revenue bureau was undiminished, while the reductions in taxation were insignificant. Mr. Beck offered an amendment reducing by 10 cents per pound the tax on manufactured tobacco, when the bill went over, and the senate adjourned.

JULY 15.—In the senate, Mr. Anthony introduced a bill to repeal so much of the army appropriation law as provides for the retirement of Generals Sherman and Sheridan. There was considerable discussion on a resolution directing the secretary of the interior to suspend action on the payment of a double pension to General Ward B. Burnett, but no action was taken. A resolution was adopted calling on the president for copies of the declarations of Bulwer and Clayton upon the ratification of the treaty. The pension appropriation bill, covering $100,000,000, was taken up. An amendment calling for an annual list of pensions borne on the rolls was struck out, and the bill was passed. The senate insisted upon its amendments to the river and harbor bill, and a conference committee was appointed.

HOUSE.

JULY 10.—The house, by a vote of 108 to 78, adopted the conference report on the bill to extend the charters of national banks. A bill was passed authorizing the transfer of property of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan home to the Garfield Memorial hospital. Mr. White introduced a resolution for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the abridgment of rights of citizens on account of sex. The sundry civil appropriation bill was taken up in committee of the whole. A provision to deduct moneys from pensions payable at the soldiers' homes was struck out. An item of $75,000 for a quay wall at the New London navy-yard was lost. The committee then rose. Mr. Dingley introduced a bill for a commission to inquire into the condition of the ship-building interests and to suggest methods to restore the foreign carrying trade.

JULY 11.—The house spent the day in working on the sundry civil appropriation bill in committee of the whole. An amendment was adopted authorizing the establishment of an industrial Indian school on the Pawnee reservation in Nebraska. The appropriation for the geological survey was increased to $230,000.

the whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The item of $2,400,000 for public printing and binding caused Messrs. Atkins and Randall to declare that such deficiencies arose from executive maladministration, while Messrs. Hiscock and Robeson maintained that they occurred through necessity. It was agreed that supreme court reports shall be published at the government office and sold at 10 per cent. over the cost price. Ninety minutes were wasted in a debate over the removal of committee stenographers. Mr. Blackburn offered an amendment, which was adopted, for the payment of one month's extra salary to employes of the house. But one page of the bill remains to be completed in committee.

JULY 13.—The house resumed consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was passed by 138 to 49. An item of $4,000 for the family of the late Mr. Hawk was agreed to. It was decided to appropriate $70,000 to meet the expenses of thirty-five contestants to seats, and to set aside $20,000 to pay the bills of a commission to negotiate a commercial treaty with Mexico. Mr. Holman offered an amendment to appropriate $15,000 to enable the president to carry out the statute to promote civil-service reform. Mr. Horr opened the ball in opposition, and Mr. Willis responded with a story, the discussion being continued by Messrs. Cox, Reed, Springer, and Robeson, when the proposition was adopted.

JULY 14.—The house, in considering the senate amendments to the general deficiency bill, refused to accept the item of $33,000 for mileage to senators for the special session of October last. On the amendment to create a board of audit for the Garfield claims, Mr. Blackburn attacked the surgeons for their management of the president's case, eulogized the Pennsylvania Railroad company, and urged that all claimants be sent to the courts. Mr. Taylor, representing Garfield's district, announced that the president's widow would never litigate the bills of the physicians. Mr. Springer remarked that if only $35,000 were allotted to the doctors there would be a more unseemly quarrel than occurred over Guiteau's body. Mr. Hiscock regretted that the country should be treated to such a scene. Mr. Dunnell thought the settlement of the matter should be left to the house. Mr. Williams appealed to members to increase the amount fixed in the amendment and stop the wrangling. The amendment was non-concurred in by 78 to 83. Mr. Taylor then introduced a bill, which was passed by an unanimous vote, to pay Mrs. Garfield $50,000 less any sum advanced to her husband on salary account. A bill was passed to refer to the court of claims all demands against the government. An evening session was held to consider pension bills, forty of which were passed. Seventy-five condemned cannon were voted away for monumental purposes.

JULY 15.—In the house, Mr. Cannon reported the disagreement of the conference committee on the legislative appropriation, and the conferees were reappointed, and instructed to insist on their views being considered. A resolution was adopted that the committee on civil-service reform consider the inequalities of salaries of senate and house employes, and another that the president be requested to furnish information in regard to the pool recently entered into by the French Cable company. The house then went into committee of the whole on the senate amendments to the river and harbor appropriation, none of them being concurred in, even the Hennepin canal project falling.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Nearly one hundred members of the Cameron state central committee of Pennsylvania met at Philadelphia Wednesday to restore harmony in the party. The candidates for state offices were invited into the hall, and were received with cheers. They presented a letter placing their claims in the hands of the committee. It was then resolved to send the independents four propositions from which a choice can be made—viz., that both tickets be submitted to a vote of the party at the primaries; that the party at the primaries select a ticket by popular vote; that a new convention be held on the fourth Wednesday in August, either under the rules of the recent conference or the rules of the republican convention of May 10. The independent conference at Harrisburg spent four hours in the evening considering the above propositions, and adjourned without reaching a conclusion.

The bombardment of Alexandria was commenced on Tuesday morning by the Sultan, Superb, and Alexandria, of the British fleet. The batteries replied at once, their shot at first falling short of the ships. The Inflexible, Monarch, Penelope, Invincible, and Monarch soon joined in the battle. Two of the forts ceased firing after twenty minutes. The gunboats Bittern, Condor, Beacon, Decoy, and Cygnet attacked and quickly silenced the Marabout batteries at the entrance to the harbor. The Invincible then landed a party of marines at Fort Mex, who blew up the heavy guns with dynamite. At the moment of opening the siege dense crowds of people could be seen making their way toward the palace, and the streets were soon deserted. The Geneva red cross was visible over the hospital, and the Dutch and Greek flags could be seen waving above their consulates. At 8 o'clock the magazine at Fort Ada, close to the palace, was exploded. At noon four forts had been blown up, when the firing practically ceased. The English fleet had five men killed and twenty-seven wounded. Several of the earthworks behind which guns were mounted proved to be mere sand-heaps. Wednesday morning, the inflexible and Temeraire reopened fire on the Moncrieffe fort, which had been repaired during the night. The batteries were evidently much damaged by the first three shots, as they made no response. A steamer was soon seen approaching the fleet with a flag of truce, and a similar emblem was hoisted at the arsenal, when the bombardment was suspended. Nothing seems to have been accomplished by the negotiations, as the British men-of-war were during the evening posted to command the fortifications. Several large fires broke out in the city in the afternoon, and assumed huge proportions at night. It is believed that the Bedouins are pillaging the town. The barracks, houses, and wind-mills around Fort Mex were shattered to pieces. The light-house stands, but a number of holes are visible in the masonry. When the gunboat Bittern proceeded to the harbor to learn the object of the flag of truce, Toulba Pasha sent word that he wished to communicate with Admiral Seymour, and was informed that as a preliminary condition the forts must be surrendered. The khedive was uninjured, having gone to Ramleh palace with Dervisch Pasha. The store-ship Humber left during the night with the wounded, in regard to whose condition Queen Victoria sent a message of inquiry. A telephone was on Tuesday morning attached to the cable at Malta over which the bombardment was distinctly heard. The Turkish ambassador at London was informed by Earl Granville that England acted in the name of Europe. At daylight, Thursday morning, a flag of truce was flying at Ras-el-Tin palace. The Helicon has a flag of truce flying, and the Invincible, Monarch and Penelope are steaming into the inner harbor. The remainder of the squadron are outside, steaming about. The fire in the town has greatly extended during the night. The entire garrison withdrew while under the protection of a flag of truce, leaving the city in flames, and retreated toward the interior. The European quarter was utterly destroyed by fires set by released convicts. One hundred Europeans fought their way in a body to the beach, whence they were taken by British boats to the telegraph ship Chiltern. They report that hundreds of Christians were massacred in the streets and in the Ottoman bank building. The bulk of the Egyptian army is said to be at Rosetta and Damanhour, respectively, about forty miles northeast and southeast of Alexandria. Admiral Seymour landed 450 marines and 150 sailors, and firing has since been heard on shore. The British marines who have been patrolling Alexandria embarked on the gunboat Bittern, Friday evening, and a large party of seamen from British and neutral men-of-war went ashore to keep order during the night. It is reported that Arabi Pasha is outside the city with a strong force. The fire continues with unabated fury, and women have been seen throwing petroleum upon buildings. All the Arabs carry white handkerchiefs on sticks. Some Egyptian police are still on duty helping to maintain order. The American vessels landed sixty marines, under command of Captain Cochrane. The people are being encouraged to return to their houses. Sailors, landed at the request of the khedive, occupy all the gates, and have orders to disarm soldiers and shoot plunderers. Arabi Pasha ordered the sacking of the town before quitting it, and the soldiers were the first to begin the work of plunder. Arabi Pasha is believed to be awaiting reinforcements from Cairo. Firing was heard outside Alexandria on Saturday night, and all the available sailors and marines were sent to the front, to forestall an invasion of the city. The fire continues, and incendiaries are shot daily. It is believed that whole families of Europeans were thrown into the flames. Five of Arabi's soldiers were captured by marines and handed over to the khedive, who will have them shot by loyal troops. English sailors flogged ten Arabs who were guilty of arson, pillage, or rape, and four men were publicly shot for murder, and one as a spy. The grain market has reopened, but hundreds of people are starving and houseless. Admiral Seymour has forbidden the firing of the usual salutes and daily time guns by the Egyptians. Arabi Pasha is at Kafridwar, where he has four infantry regiments, 1,500 irregular troops, one cavalry regiment, thirty-six Krupp guns, and twelve mitrailleuses. He has been summoned to Alexandria by the khedive, who will treat him as a rebel should he refuse to obey. The British have cut the Cairo railway near Lake Mareotis.

McRAY—In Tecumseh, July 5, 1882, Father McRay, aged 84 years and 4 months.

He had long been a resident of Lenawee county, identifying himself with Tecumseh in 1835. He was widely known as one of the pioneers of this state. He lived for over fifty years a member of the M. E. church. Consistent always—not demonstrative in his religious exercises, but always ready to give his testimony in defence of the christian faith and ready always with his means to help every [illegible] had survived his usefulness, yet his patient spirit during his years of helplessness was a tribute to the strength of his character. He suffered resignedly, and died in full hope of eternal rest.

ESTATE OF HORACE BREWER.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, s. s.

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian on Monday, the 17th day of July in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Horace Brewer, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, of Albert L. Brewer, administrator of the estate of said deceased, alleging that he has paid the debts of deceased and the expenses of administration of said estate thus far incurred, and praying for the allowance of his final account, for an assignment and distribution of the residue of said estate to and amongst the persons entitled thereto, and for his discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 14th day of August next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing. For the benefit of its many lady readers, will the HERALD state whether women who attend school meetings can vote directly on questions involving the disbursement of money, or is their voting power limited to the privilege of assisting to elect officers for that purpose? Also if the office of school inspector, where conferred on a woman, will permit her to vote directly on questions concerning the amount of money, and for what purpose it shall be paid in defraying school expenses? We are often invited to attend school meetings and vote, but before accepting the invitation would like to know what influence that vote will have, so respectfully ask to have our ignorance explained away.

Ministers have again ventured to occupy our some time vacant pulpits, but a few people who are not supposed to have heard of their arrival, thought to worship privately yesterday, in the grove of A. H. Delamatyr, a quiet place almost surrounded by Clark's lake. Those who are able to read sermons in minnow fish ponds and restore their spiritual equilibrium among woods and small dwellings therein should resort to that temple, while summer conditions are favorable and the lake house proprietor and wife are there to welcome them. It is not a place that money makes free to all, consequently the Sabbath is not desecrated by noise or confusion of any kind. A few cottages and tents line the shore, but those belonging to a Jackson clergyman, were closed for the day, and their owner on duty elsewhere. Mr. Ransom, of Jackson, has a pretty cottage in two chapters, and a nice fashion of entertaining strangers. The next play-house has a fountain beside it that is a pocket edition of the large one spouting ice cold water into a basin in the central ground. Some wild plum trees touch branches above it, and a number of contented looking fish swim lazily in the aquarium near the fountain. The grove is a paradise for children, and we took enough along to people it. Though trees are large, and close neighbors, the ground wears a thick grass carpet, and the grove and tenmer day seem unaccountably brief to

The Popular Science Monthly for August, 1882.

The first place in "The Popular Science Monthly" for August is given to the concluding part of the address of Emil du Bois-Reymond on "The Physiology of Exercise," in which the action of exercise on the nervous centers, its relation to natural selection, and the comparative merits of different systems of gymnastic and out-door training are considered. This is one of the kind of papers the reading of which demands thought and stimulates it; and it is the paying of attention to discussions of this kind that in large part marks the difference between "The Popular Science Monthly" and the ordinary popular magazines. COMMON COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VILLAGE OF TECUMSEH, MICH., Council Room, July 17, 1882.

Regular session. Present, the entire Council.

The minutes of the preceding meeting read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On Finance:

Deferred till later in the session.

On Fire and Fire Limits:

Committee reported that the water tank had been painted as heretofore directed.

NEW BUSINESS.

Mr. W. E. Gray made report of his services for the past three years, in substance as follows:

During the past three years I have kept in the water tank an average of thirteen feet of water or thirteen-fifteenths of its capacity; repairs upon the wind mill during the same time $8.00; the pump and mill are now in fair working order; leakage of the tank has nearly been done away with by the painting recently done.

Three years ago the route of street-lamps covered three and one half miles, with thirty-three lamps; there are now sixty-three lamps and eight more are soon to be added, which will make the daily trip, in oiling and lighting about eighteen miles; during the past three years I have made my too trips each and every day.

On motion, the President was authorized to secure Mr. Gray's services for next year upon the same terms as this year; and also, on motion, the team was placed under the direction of the President.

The matter of subscribing for a telephone was discussed and on motion was indefinitely postponed.

On motion, Mr. Stout was appointed a committee to ascertain at how low a figure telephonic connection other than by the Michigan Bell Telephone could be secured between his residence and the Council building.

The following bills were presented and referred to finance committee.

Whitenack, Bordine & Co., bill rendered,	$70.10
Wm. Tate, painting water tank,	11.00
Stacy Bros., bill rendered,	17.75

On motion the Council passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Council do hereby require that a sidewalk be built along that portion of the south line of Chicago street in this village which lies along and adjoining the north line of that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, county of Lenawee, and State of Michigan, known and described as follows, viz: Bounded north by Chicago street, east by Tilton's and Griffith's lots, south by Chaplin's lot and west by Cotton's lot. Said sidewalk to be six feet in width, of sound pine plank 1½ inches thick and not to exceed 6 inches in width, laid lengthwise and well spiked down upon sound burr or white oak stringers 2x4 in size and placed not more than 2 feet apart and double at joints; subject to the direction of the street commissioner, and to be completed within ten days from the date hereof; and that in case of any default in the construction and completion of said walk as herein directed the street commissioner is hereby directed to construct said walk, and that payment therefor shall be required of the owner of said adjoining land.

Resolved, That this Council do hereby require that a sidewalk be constructed along that portion of the north line of Kilbuck street in this village, which lies along and adjoining the south line of that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, county of Lenawee, and State of Michigan, known and described as follows, viz: Lot 6, block 13, Hoag's addition to said village of Tecumseh. Said sidewalk to be four feet in width, of sound pine plank 1½ inches thick and not to exceed 6 inches in width, laid lengthwise and well spiked down upon sound burr or white oak stringers 2x4 in size and placed not more than two feet apart and double at joints; subject to the direction of the street commissioner and to be completed within ten days from date hereof; and in case of any default in the construction and completion of said walk as herein directed, the street commissioner is hereby directed to construct said walk and payment therefor shall be required of the owner of said adjoining land.

Mary and Martha.

BY EUNICE E. GIBBS ALLYN.

Said Martha to Mary, when spring was begun,
"My dear, you must help 'til the cleaning is done;
The smoke of the house, its dirt and its grim,
Must be scoured and scraped from center to rim."

Said Mary to Martha, in the sunshine of spring,
"My dear, when the woodlands their green banners fling
In joyous rejoicing, released from death's bands,
Shall we throw soft soap with a mop in our hands?"

Said Martha to Mary, "Neither lilies nor trees
Are you and I, to live as we please;
But here, in the midst of scrub pails and brooms,
With plenty of work for them, we live in rooms."

Said Mary to Martha, "I know I'm no tree,
To root in one spot, 'til death sets me free;
And why I should make the lowest work of the free,
The highest aim of my life, for my life I can't see."

"I cannot tell how," said Martha, turning away,
"I reason out work, she reasons out play;
She sits when I cook, sleeps when I mend the bed,
Yet goes on assuming, she's nothing but head."

"Eternal the truth of the fitness of things;"
Says Mary, as Martha the dinner bell rings;
"The brains buy the bread she slices so spry,
The world goes in pairs, let her slice and I'll fly."

A MODERN ANTIQUE.

"Ten pounds!" repeated Mr. Robinson, lazily lifting his hand from the pillows that were piled at the proper end of the sofa, and holding his cigar suspended in one hand. "My darling Mab, what can you possibly want with ten pounds?"

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were on their wedding trip in Cornwall. The first burnishing was not yet off the wedding-ring—the honeymoon was still glittering at its full, and consequently Mr. Robinson, when he asked his wife what she could possibly want with ten pounds, spoke without the animus which might probably attend a corresponding query ten years later.

The hotel stood on an overhanging plateau of rock, which commanded a view of sea, hills, dale, and glen,—the soft, August breeze stirred the scented evergreen boughs with fingers of balm, and Mr. Robinson languorously reclining on the sofa, was almost asleep over his novel when the voice of his wife interrupted his doze.

"Oh, Charley!" breathlessly cried the little bride, who was round and dimpled, with hair of pale German gold, and sparkling blue eyes, "we've had such an adventure, Mrs. Simpson, and I."

"An adventure, eh?" said Charley, looking admiringly at his wife's rosy cheeks.

"We've found the darlingest little one-storied farmhouse up on the hills," went on Mabel, "with such a love of an old man in knee-breeches and blue knitted stockings, and an old woman in white cap frills, and as deaf as a post. We walked six miles and went in for a glass of water. And we had some such delicious home-brewed cider and saffron cake. And, oh, Charley, there was the sweetest old-fashioned spinning-wheel in the corner, and an old arm-chair which had the date 1688 carved on its bottom, and a perfectly exquisite shovel and tongs of wrought brass. Such a set of antiques! Mrs. Hunter will die of envy at the mere sight of them in my drawing-room."

"Because, my dear," Mabel, valiantly, "I've bought 'em. The three for ten pounds. The darling old creature didn't want to part with them, but her husband represented to her how many nice things she could buy for the money, and so, finally, she gave in. But all the time I was waiting in a trembling fest I shouldn't be able to get the things. And Mrs. Simpson was ready to cry because she couldn't afford 'em.

"But, Mabel," said Mr. Robinson, screwing up his lips, "isn't ten pounds a pretty round price to pay for two or three old rattle-traps?"

Mrs. Robinson's rosy mouth quivered—her eyes filled with tears.

"Charles," said she, "you don't love me, or you never would speak in that heartless manner."

Mr. Robinson jumped up from the sofa, and put his arms carelessly round his bride's neck.

"Don't fret, Mab," said he, with the coaxing air which one would use to a grieved child. "We'll go up to the farm together, you and I, in the morning, and buy the things. If you wanted the Roc's Egg itself, sweetheart, you should have it."

"Oh, but I don't care for eggs, you know," said Mabel, brightening up. She was not a student of the "Arabian Nights," and the Roc's Egg had no particular meaning to her. And she immediately fell to work making a diagram of her pretty little new drawing-room at home to decide where she should put the spinning-wheel, and whether the antique arm-chair was to stand in the recess between the windows, or opposite the Queen Anne fireplace.

"If it rains to-morrow morning I shal be in despair," said Mrs. Robinson.

But it didn't rain; there was not a cloud in the sky. The thermometer was at ninety in the shade, and a soft blue mist brooded over the valley below. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson had a delightful pilgrimage up the hill-side. Mrs. Robinson had a box of sweetmeats in her pocket, and Mr. Robinson carried a volume of Tennyson, out of which he read melodious extracts to his Mabel when they sat down on old stone walls and under the shadow of umbrageous hedges of blackberries and wild fuschias to rest; while Mabel sat and looked enchanted, and exclaimed "Delightful!" and "How sweet!" at every pause; while, in reality, her mind was wandering far away over the pattern of Mrs. Hunter's lace flounces, and the probability of there being a carpet-dance in the hotel dining-room the next evening.

At last they reached the one-storied farmhouse with its windows covered with blue-capped convolvulus, and the patch of cabbages in the rear. Mr. Robinson inspected the spinning-wheel and pronounced it "a rum concern," nodded wisely at the arm chair, and suggested that the shovel and tongs would look a little better for polishing up,—and then he handed over the money which made them his absolute property.

"Send the things up to the Cliff Hotel," he said, "and I'll have them packed and sent to London from there."

And when they were safe in the woodland path once more, Mabel stood up on the tips of her little French boots to kiss her husband over and over again.

"You're such a darling, Charley," said she, "to think of everything. Because, of course, the things will be ruined, if they're not nicely packed."

"I want 'em to come all right, of course," said Mr. Robinson. "Not that I care much for such old trash myself——"

"Oh, Charley," pleaded his wife, "don't say old trash." Say antiques."

"Well, antiques, then," Charley, corrected himself, with a grimace. "But since we've paid such a price for them, it's well to have 'em delivered all sound and ship-shape."

"I wish Charley," breathed the bride, "that you cared more for art."

"Oh, hang art!" said Mr. Robinson. "Now, don't look so scandalised, wifey. I like new, bright, pretty things, as well as anybody, but I can't understand this paying fancy prices for old rattle-traps that we used to sell to the second-hand dealers."

Mabel laughed. "Charley," said she, "you are an outer barbarian."

"Very likely, my love," said Mr. Robinson. And then they stopped to drink from a crystal spring which bubbled out of the recesses of a huge grey rock, and forgot all about their little differences of opinion.

The "antiques" were duly delivered at the hotel the next day, and a carpenter, recommended by the landlord, arrived to see about the boxing up of the same. He was an honest, heavy-faced young man, who did the job thoroughly, and spared neither nails nor screws.

"You're sure, now, that they'll go all right?" said Mr. Robinson, when at last the packing was complete, and the carpenter stood, hat in hand, to receive his well-earned remuneration.

"Oh, yes, sir, as right as a brick!" answered the heavy-faced young man. "And I'd ought to know,—for I've boxed nineteen of 'em this season, for the gentlefolks!"

Mr. Robinson looked at him in surprise.

"Nineteen—what?" said he.

"Of these 'ere spinnin'-wheels, sir," answered the carpenter, with a broad smile. "Lord love you, sir, they goes off like one o'clock. Just as fast as our guv'nor can make them! The London folks fancies 'em—and we make 'em up, arter an old pattern, and stains 'em and sends 'em down to old Joshua Pardee's to sell. Likely you bought this 'ere there, sir, didn't you?"

"Yes, I did," said Mr. Robinson, divided between a desire to laugh and an almost unconquerable inclination to use profane language. "And I supposed it was at least two hundred years old!"

"Old Josh didn't say it was, did he?" said the carpenter, scratching his head.

"Well, no," slowly uttered Mr. Robinson, trying to remember. "Not in so many words."

"He wouldn't" aid the carpenter. "He's a methody member, is Josh Pardee. And he's particular 'bout what he says."

"But," added Robinson, "the old chair had a date carved under its seat—1688!"

"Well, yes," said the carpenter, "they are carved, sure enough. But what of that? Why, sir, don't you know you can prevent folks cuttin' what figures they likes on furniture, is there? And our guv'nor, he's made a deal of money out of them chairs since the fashion came in!"

Mr. Robinson said nothing. Where was the use? Mabel had wanted antiques, and they had paid antique prices. Let the carpenter and his revelations sink into oblivion. The world was full of knaves, and he had proved one of their victims. That was all.

So he never told Mabel that her spinning-wheel and arm-chair had been manufactured to order within the last three months. He took no steps to break up the thriving business of "the guv'nor" and his venerable confederates. After all, no amount of law could grind the folly out of fools. He had suffered. Let other people go through the same ordeal.

But he never bought another drawing-room ornament without knowing exactly where it came from. And he smiles a grim, misanthropic sort of smile when he sees Mabel point out her treasures to the ladies of her acquaintance, and hears her say, artlessly:

"They are genuine antiques. I bought 'em out of the farmhouse myself. And just look at the date carved on this love of an old arm-chair: 1688!"

"Dear, dear! how fortunate you are to obtain such treasures as these!"

Luck.

Bad luck depends very largely on the amount of downright laziness which is packed away in our system, and good luck consists greatly in what is properly called your grip on affairs. Some people have had bad luck because their hands always slip when they take hold of anything, and others have good luck because they take hold and keep hold.

"All my crop of corn," said one of the former ilk, sulkily, "has somehow failed me this season. I never do have some sort of luck."

A brisk, thriving farmer who stood by remarked,—"Well, John, that's very strange, for we haven't had such a good season for many a year. What kind of corn did you plant, pray?"

"Wall," was the reply, "I suppose it is partly to be accounted for by the fact that last spring I was so awful busy about other things that I forgot all about the corn until it was too late, and then I concluded not to plant it."

The idiot who eats oranges and bananas on the public street and throws the skins on the sidewalk for folks to slip down on, is not dead yet. That sort of fellows outlive their usefulness very early in life, and yet, for some unknown reason, Providence prolongs their existence long after everybody else wishes them either dead or in Tophet.

"The parting gives me pain," as the man said when he had a troublesome tooth extracted.

Capt. Drisko's Ghost Story.

At a meeting of religious reformers held in the house of Mr. W. H. Banks, East Boston, recently, Capt. C. P. Drisko, who is well-known as an able and experienced shipmaster, spoke in substance as follows:

In the winter of 1865 I commanded the ship Harry Booth, bound from New York for Dry Tortugas, with a cargo a government stores and two hundred mechanics and laborers to be employed on the fortifications then in the course of construction. When the ship reached the vicinity of Abaco the wind blew a fierce norther, with heavy rain; the sun had gone down, and his weather soon became quite dark. To haul off was impossible, the wind blew too fresh to carry sail, and the only rational course left was to incur the risk of crossing the Bahama banks. The ship drew fourteen feet, and I could not expect that there was much more than fifteen feet of water on some parts of the banks. A foot is very little to spare under a ship's keel; but I resolved to take the chance, and accordingly squared away—that is, put the ship before the wind, and took my departure from Berry island. Having seen everything in order on deck, I left the chief mate, Mr. Peterson, a careful and trustworthy officer in charge, and went below for a little rest. At 10:50 o'clock I heard a voice, clear and distinct, say: 'Go on deck and anchor!' 'Who are you?' I demanded, and sprang on deck, for I was not a man to take orders from anyone. I found the ship going along her true course, and everything as I could wish. I questioned Mr. Peterson if he had seen any person enter the cabin, but neither he nor the man at the wheel had either seen or heard anyone.—Thinking it may have been hallucination, I went below again. About 11:50 a man with gray great-coat and slouched hat entered the cabin, and, looking me straight in the face, commanded me to go on deck and anchor. He left the cabin deliberately. I heard his heavy tread as he passed before me. Once more I sprang on deck, and found the ship all right. Sure of my course I was not disposed, even with this second warning, to obey any man or anything else, no matter what appearance it might put on. Again I went below, but not to sleep, for I had everything on ready for a spring on deck. At 12:50 A. M. the same man entered the cabin, and, more imperiously than before, said: 'Go on deck and anchor!' I recognized at a glance that the speaker was my old friend, Capt. John Barton, with whom I had sailed when a boy, and who treated me with great kindness. I sprang on deck, rounded the ship to, and anchored her with fifty fathoms of chain. All hands were called and the sails furled. Shortly afterward I felt the ship touch, but neither the mate nor any one else noticed it. A few minutes later, however, all hands felt it. I threw the lead first from one side, then from the other, and found five fathoms (thirty feet) of water. I was perplexed, and asked myself what it could mean, when the same voice sang out: 'Throw the lead over the stern.' I did so, and to my dismay found only thirteen and a half feet. (The ship drew fourteen feet.) I immediately set the mizzen topsail, and spanker, and backed her clear of the reef, against which she sheered every time she brought a strain upon her chain. The danger was past; the ship rode clear of the reef, and sustained but little damage where she struck. A ship which spoke me in the early part of the [illegible] miliar with the Bahamas, said that he would follow me, and for this purpose I hung a light over my stern. Watching my movements closely, he rounded to almost as soon as I did, and thereby saved his vessel. No doubt the norther had shallowed the water on the banks, and if we had continued on our course we both might have been wrecked.—Will those who assume that the spirits of our departed friends do not take an interest in us please explain? What I have stated is true. It was the spirit of a departed friend, Capt. John Barton, well known as one of the best shipmasters in the country.—Boston Traveller.

Lafayette's Lucky Horseshoe.

S. E. Bunell, a blacksmith of Buffalo, has a lucky horseshoe which has been in the Bunell family for nearly a century. There is in connection with the shoe a most interesting history which the reporter was make acquainted with. It seems that in 1771, General Lafayette, with the immortal Washington, was making a tour through the northern portion of New York State, and one evening, near nightfall, they reined up at a neat and comfortable looking inn, which was kept by Mr. James Haskins. Here the distinguished guests tarried for a week. Just before resuming their journey, Lafayette's horse cast a shoe, and the famous General, picking it up handed it to "mine host," and smiling, said: "Here, take this and keep it, for it is an inheritance of luck." The recipient heartily thanked the donor, and carrying the gift into the house, kept it—treasuring it highly long after. Mr. Haskins handed it over to his son-in-law, Ira Brooks, whose wife died in 1876, at the advanced age of 100 years. The mother of Mr. Bunell, of this city, afterward came into possession of the relic. This intelligent lady resides with another of her sons, Mr. William Bunell, near Pembroke, Genesee County. Though nearly an octogenarian, Mrs. Bunell has retained her mental faculties, wonderfully, and recites some facts in connection with this horseshoe which are certainly most interesting. Mr. William Bunell then fell heir to the shoe, and a short time ago gave it to the present owner, who takes especial delight in showing the curiosity.

What Hats Young Men May Wear.

Dress hats for Spring are of pearl gray cassimere with a bell crown five and a half inches high, and round curved English brim that is nearly two inches wide. The felt hat for business and general wear is an English Derby, larger than those lately worn; the crown is five and a fourth inches high, and the rolled brim is two inches and an eighth in width.—Cocoa brown is the stylish color, and there are navy blue and English green Derbys imported to match suits. American Derby hats have more tapering crowns, and are not so high as the English shapes; they come in pearl color, black and brown.

Spoopendyke.

The Cats Polly Explained.

"My dear," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, examining the baby's feet critically, to see if they were both alike, "my dear, I see that one of the strikers, or capital, has been hurt; do you know the facts about it?"

"How hurt? what did it say?" asked Mr. Spoopendyke, turning from the glass and strapping his razor.

"I don't remember exactly, but he went down to a slaughter-house to get something for his family and somebody shot him in the legs."

"That's the way it happened, was it?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke, grinning through his lather. "He didn't go to his family for a pair of legs and somebody shot him in the slaughter-house, did he? Nor he didn't go down to his legs for a slaughter-house, and somebody shot him in the family! That wasn't the way it read, was it?"

"No-o-o, I think not," replied Mrs. Spoopendyke, dubiously. "I'm sure it was something about a slaughter-house and legs. Do you know how it happened?"

"Yes, I know how it happened," mocked Mr. Spoopendyke, pegging away at his visage with the razor. "If I hadn't found out a way from home I'd always been puzzled about it, though. Two gentlemen fought a duel, and one got shot. That's all there is in it."

"I knew ther'd be some trouble as soon as I read about those strikes," confidently continued Mrs. Spoopendyke.

"What's the strike to do with it?" vociferated Mr. Spoopendyke. "Think he struck for another shot? Got a notion he struck for more legs, haven't ye? It would have been a bad idea, that," soliloquized Mr. Spoopendyke, rather impressed with the combined originality and utility of that class of strike.

"Did he get shot in both legs?" queried Mrs. Spoopendyke. "It must have been a cannon ball, or else he held his legs in front of each other."

"That's the way he did it," moaned Mr. Spoopendyke. "They always do that. When they are fighting a duel they sit down like a tailor or a Turk.—What d'ye think they fight with, forts? Got some kind of a vague idea that they fight with line of battle ships? Who said anything about cannon balls? Pistols, I tell ye! They fought with pistols, and one of them hit the other! Roll that information around in your ten-acre intelligence!"

"Certainly," faltered Mrs. Spoopendyke. "But tell me, dear, why should one man shoot another for going to the slaughter-house?"

"Holy herring!" ejaculated Mr. Spoopendyke. "He went there to get shot. It was agreed upon. The man who shot him had reflected on his honor, and he went there to satisfy it."

"And did it satisfy his honor to shoot him in the legs?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke.

"That was as near as he could get to it. I tell you that when a man fights a duel he wipes out an insult, whether he gets shot in the legs or the ear. It makes no difference."

"I should think it would," murmured Mrs. Spoopendyke. "It would to me. So his honor is all right now, is it?"

"Of course it is," replied Spoopendyke, wiping his face. "Suppose you can reason on the subject without any further information from me?"

"I guess so," ruminated Mrs. Spoopendyke. "As I understand it, if a man's honor is hurt all he's got to do is get shot in the legs, though I don't see why he didn't shoot himself, unless it was that he couldn't reach round."

"That's just the reason!" roared Mr. Spoopendyke. "He shot at himself in the looking-glass all the morning, and couldn't make it work, so he hired a man to do it for him! It took your shot-tower intellect to see into it! What you want now is a squint in one eye and some dod gasted crooked legs to figure to be a revised edition of the honor code! If you only had some body to chalk off six paces on you and a [illegible] of police with a bench warrant [illegible] a regular Bladensburg [illegible] to fight a duel and get shot [illegible] stand it then? If I had a bullet through both legs, would you want any more information?"

"No, dear," sighed Mrs. Spoopendyke, and as her husband tossed his shaving brush into the baby's crib and slammed out the door, she began to think that a man shouldn't keep his honor in his legs if they couldn't take better care of it.

That Was It.

The practice of giving short weights is common in all trades. How a Detroit merchant desired to make amends is set forth in the following neat bit of humor from the Detroit Free Press:

"Sir!" began a Detroiter as he entered a grocery the other morning, "Sir! I ordered some butter of you yesterday!"

"Yes—ah—I know, meant to have sent it up but forgot it. You shall have it right away."

"Sir! the butter came up on time."

"Oh—ah—it did, eh! Well, I'm sorry it was poor, but we shall have some better in a day or two."

"Sir! the butter came up on time and was all right, best I've seen in a year."

"You don't say so! Certainly—just so—I'll make up the weight on the next lot."

"Sir! the butter was good, the weight correct, and I called to order six pounds more."

"Is it possible? Well, I do declare! Then that was it? Well, well, but accidents will happen in the best regulated groceries, you know. Sorry, but will do better next time."

A Charlotte (N. Y.) fisherman has invented an alarm to denote a bite. Fastened to the rod is a ball with a spring attachment, which is connected with the main line by a piece of rubber. When a bass nibbles at the bait the rubber is stretched, loosening the spring, and firing off a cap, which wakes up the angler. This will fill a long-felt want.

It is calculated that at the rate the sand of New Jersey is being exported in strawberry boxes, there will be not enough left of the State in one hundred years for its two senators to live in.

A Warlike Parrot.

"Old Abe," the war eagle of a Wisconsin regiment, will be famous in history as the bird who delighted in battles. Strange as it may seem, his career is paralleled by that of a parrot's:

A gentleman, who lives on Preston Street, in Louisville, Ky., owns a parrot with a curious history. The parrot is a large black bird, with bright, piercing eyes. Whenever he becomes excited, he raises himself to his full height, and ruffles his crest in a manner that is quite startling. He is now sixty-three years old.

Just before the last war in this country, he was bought by Gen. Rousseau, who taught the bird many military expressions, such as "Shoulder Arms!" "Carry Arms!" "Right Shoulder Shift!" "Halt!" and "Forward March!"

He went with Gen. Rousseau to the front, and soon became a great favorite with the soldiers. On one occasion, when Gen. Rousseau knew there was going to be hard fighting, he fastened the bird in a tent.

Polly was in a rage, and at last, working his way out at the canvas door of the tent, flew toward his regiment, which was now hotly engaged in battle.

The regiment raised a loud cheer when the parrot appeared and fearlessly perched upon the pommel of Gen. Rousseau's saddle. The general tried to make him go back, but the bird refused; and always after that, when the regiment was about to advance the general's odd companion could be seen sitting defiantly in front of his master.

"There come Rousseau and his parrot," soon became a by-word with the soldiers. The parrot remained with the regiment until the end of the war.

He became so used to the sound of the artillery that he could mimic the roar of a cannon, and even now the sound of a drum will cause his feathers to ruffle and his eyes to flash.—Golden Days.

Pure Cistern Water and How to Get It.

Pure water for domestic use is of great importance. In most wells the water is more or less impregnated with lime, or other material or earthy substance, so that it is not so pure as rain water. Wells are often so deep that it is hard drawing the water. For family use, I would recommend a cistern. Most places where a well can be dug, and where it is not so sandy as to cave, a cistern can be plastered with cement without walling with brick or stone. When I built my house, four years ago, I dug my cistern back of the house before I built the summer kitchen, so as to have it in the kitchen. The filterer is a small cistern, one or two feet from the other cistern, with a tile for a spout to connect them. The end of this pipe in the filterer is enclosed by a small circular brick wall, or a double wall of two inches each, with a space of two inches between, which is filled with pulverized charcoal. The surface of this filtering wall is scarcely a square yard, and that part of the roof discharging into the cistern is twenty-four feet by forty. Yet it is only the most violent thunder-shower that gives more than enough water to pass readily through the filterer. The main cistern is six feet in diameter and twenty-four feet deep. This gives us cool water all summer—as cool as well-water. We draw with a chain-pump, which keeps the air and water circulated, so that it is pure. I prefer to have the filterer outside the main cistern, and being shallow, it is easily cleaned. Both cisterns are covered with a brick arch. In the cistern of six feet in diameter, the arch is started with a groove cut into the earth for the bottom of the arch. The earth holds it sufficiently from where the cistern is plastered. The arch rises three feet, leaving three feet of earth over it.

"No one has a right to find fault with another unless he credits him with his good qualities, otherwise it would be keeping books of debt without credit," said Deacon Solum to Dan Pelter, both residents of a lively little town in Maine. "Wall, then, deacon," replied Dan, "I'll give ye credit fur bein' a good smoker, and I'll then hev a right ter charge ye with borrerin' too much terbacker off from me."

"Is this the place," she asked, as she wandered down by the Fairmont dam, "where a young lady—a beautiful young lady—fell into the water last season, and was rescued by a gallant young man, whom she afterward married?" He looked at her carefully, estimated her at a square forty-seven, with false teeth, and said, "Yes, ma'am; but I don't know how to swim."

Economy: "It is no use," exclaimed Fenderson, at the family tea table; "we must economize. Beef and mutton are way up, butter and eggs—everything, in fact. Meat once a day is all we can afford; and, mother, you must give the children some kind of cheap sauce to save in butter. We must cut down expenses some way." And Fenderson then lights his 15 cent cigar and sallies forth to the billiard room, putting out a matter of two or three dollars in the course of the evening.—Boston Transcript.

She was just arranging to settle down comfortably on Alphonso's shoulder, and Al's eyes were contemplating her with that rapture which is the top dressing of a loving and susceptible nature, when the parlor door opened and her youngest brother, the pride and hope of the family, poking his head in exclaimed, "Sallie, I've got one this time that you can't guess." His sister was an amiable girl, and always humored him, so she kindly added, "Well, Poncey, let's have it." "What's the difference," he asked, "between you and a butterfly?" As neither Sallie's nor Alphonso's face betrayed much enthusiasm over the conundrum, Percy fired off the answer at once. "'Cause a butterfly has powder on its wings, but you always have it on your face."

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

A Word of Caution.

As is usually the case where an article of true merit has attained a world wide reputation by its wonderful results, as the celebrated Electric Bitters have done, certain unprincipled parties have endeavored to imitate them, and expect to induce an unsuspecting public to purchase their fraudulent wares. Ask your druggist for the genuine Electric Bitters, that are guaranteed to cure, and take no others. Sold by all druggists at 50c.

Important to Travelers.

Special Inducements are offered you by the BURLINGTON ROUTE. It will pay you to read their advertisement to be found elsewhere in this issue.

Bodily ailments are more or less the results of Kidney affection. When the skin becomes dry and husky, pains in the back, hot and high colored urine, soreness in the small of the back, are unmistakable facts that the Kidneys are in bad condition, and a few doses of Kellogg's Columbian Oil will convince any one of its curative properties on their disorders.

Back Ache

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.
Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.
Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.
Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.
Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.
Because over 1000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.
Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Maritime: The best way to shorten sale is to stop advertising.

Women's temper and the stock market are very uncertain.

Queen Victoria has a great dignity on state occasions, "and looks every inch a queen." She has been a queen so long that she ought by this time to bear a faint resemblance to one.

A fond wife presented her husband with a beautiful suit of blue cloth as a New Year's gift. She was looking at him one day, when it struck her that the cloth was fading. Said she: "That suit don't look near as blue as when you got it." "That is strange, for I feel bluer than ever in it since I got the bill, I assure you. I changed color as soon as I saw it."

We remember once recording the fact that a little boy said that soda water tastes like your foot's asleep; but now comes a lad who says that Weiss beer is thawed sand paper. This reminds us of a Yankee on the Pacific Ocean, who for the first time got a mouthful of Chili peppers. When the tears dropped, he gasped, "For the love of Heaven, no more pins and needles on toast."

Raising Children.

Children should be set out in the nursery at as early a period in married life as is consistent with good taste.

When very young they should be kept quiet, not too much exposed to the light. It is usual to engage some old and experienced expert to attend to this, and the direction in which the "twig is inclined" at this stage is generally the ruin of the parents' peace of mind for two years.

Milk is said to be good for babes, but there are so many "patent foods" now sold at the drug stores that milk may as well be done away with. Give the child something that you don't know anything about and it will thrive—possibly.

Don't cross the child when it is small. It will take so kindly to having its own way that it is really cruel to insist on parental rights in the matter.

Learn the little coots to "crow" as early as possible. Take them in your hands and toss them up as high as you can and jounce their digestive organs all out of place. This is a genuine "raise" of children.

As soon as possible put the green baby into a carriage and push it along the sidewalk, running into everybody with it and gathering admiring crowds at the crossings to worship it. This will give the little one some idea of the way of getting on in the world in later years.

It is a good plan to hurry up a child in the matter of walking. The sooner a child walks the more bow-legged and irrepressible he will be when he grows up.

Just the moment the child lets go its mother's apron-strings plant it in the neighbor's front yard. This will save your own lawn, while the little fellow digs up the turf and carries away the lawn of the neighbor in his little red wheelbarrow.

Train the child to "appear" in company. Urge him forward. There is nothing like it. Visitors so much admire to have children climb and crawl all over them in their gentle, prankish way.

A good share of dirt makes a child grow. Soap and water is useful, however, once a week, to enable parents to recognize their own children when they call them into dinner.

Let them have their own sweet ways always. They will retaliate in the future by not letting you have yours; but what matters that?

Never allow neighbors' children on your premises. The hateful things will influence your own children for bad. Allowing your children to play with your neighbors' children on their premises, however, has a sanitary effect on those benighted little frauds, and it is your Christian duty to see that your children mingle in this manner as much as possible.

The best dressing for children is the sole of a slipper. It should be gently swayed in the air above them and applied vigorously—once in a while.

Good clothes, pretty clothes are an elaborate necessity for the little ones. If you are an $18-business-suit man, you can afford to dress a child on a $30 silk velvet, brass button basis.

When children get big enough to go to school—well, you will be astonished at the remarkable unanimity of the school teacher and board of education in relieving you of all rights, privilege and authority. You won't have anything more to do but sit with your hands folded and see these usurpants of the public make pincushions of the pups of your darlings.—New Haven Register.

A Fat Boy in Town.

A male child, 3 years and 9 months old, from Casey county, Kentucky, and weighing 140 pounds, was waddling about the capitol this morning. He is the most corpulent individual of his age that has visited the capitol since the flood. He is about three feet tall, and stands about as high from the floor sitting down as when in a perpendicular on his pedal extremities. The child was the object of much curiosity in the cloak-rooms south of the house floor for some time. The pages and a lot of men congregated and feasted their greedy optics upon his corpulency, when the "little fellow" began to cry. His father didn't pick him up in his arms, like most children of his age are embraced, but had to stand and let him bellow it out. It would have been as difficult to have picked him up as if he were a half barrel of white lead, and as hard to push along as to pull down a gate-post. So he held the boards. At the conclusion of his musicale the father wanted the child to pass over the floor of the house, but the boy proferred going down-town in a coupé. He went. At the age of 6 months he weighed over a hundred pounds, and has been the curiosity of the Blue Grass State since that time. He is intelligent, good-natured, and wears a 7¼ hat. Bully boy with a glass eye.—Washington Star.

Too Good a Talker.

Scene: A small lawn on Seneca street. Time: Noon. Personages: A parrot sunning itself on a perch beside its open cage-door, and a strange dog wandering upon the lawn. The parrot speaks first: "Sick! sick! sick him!" The dog, with ears and tail erect, looks about for something on which to charge; he espies the parrot, and an exciting scene ensues. From out the confused mass of dog-hair and parrot feathers comes the shrill cry, "Get out! d—n you, get out!" Dog breaks for street. Parrot, after looking at herself from head to foot, gravely exclaims: "Polly, you talk too much."—Cleveland Voice.

A Beneficent Action.

The miserable looks and feelings of those confined at desks or work tables are caused by weak Stomach, Kidneys or Bowels. Parker's Ginger Tonic without intoxicating has such a beneficient action on these organs and so cleanses the poisonous matters from the system, that rosy cheeks and good health are soon brought back again.—Express.

There is nothing new from the seat of war in Pennsylvania. The Independents and Regulars have discontinued sending flags of truce to the opsing side, and both sides are settling down to business. The local contest this fall in Pennsylvania will shape politics for the next two years and may perhaps decide the next Presidential election.

During the fiscal year ending the 30th of last June, the people of this country paid in the way of revenue and tariff taxation the sum of four hundred million dollars, one-fifth of the entire national debt. There are 105,000 miles of railroads in the United states, which cost in round numbers about the same sum—four hundred millions. How long will the people submit to such a burden of taxation? No other nation on the face of the earth is afflicted with such oppressive taxation. Amend the tariff and cut down the taxes.

Recent crop reports indicate that one of the largest wheat crops ever grown in the United States is now being harvested. The corn crop however is very backward and will be far below the average. The outlook for oats is good and an average crop may be expected of this cereal. Root crops, such as potatoes, etc., will be above the average. It is more than probable that the prices of farm products will [illegible] during the fall, and that the cost of living will be considerably reduced before the first of next January.

The war in Egypt is daily assuming a more threatening and serious aspect. Although the English fleet succeeded in killing a few hundred Egyptians and inflicting such damage upon the city of Alexandria as will require thirty years to repair, still they have done nothing effectual to quell Arabi Bey's revolt. The rebel, by appealing to the Musselman prejudice against the Christians, is rapidly collecting a large army, having, it is said, already enlisted one hundred thousand men under his banner. Meanwhile the Sultan refuses to send troops into Egypt and the Khedive himself is a fugitive, his army having gone bodily into the revolt. The burden of the war is thus placed upon England's shoulders, and the present indications are that the other European governments intend it shall rest there.—Johnny Bull will find that he has a big contract on his hands before he gets through with it.

The pension question is becoming a serious one. The item of pensions has so increased in the annual appropriation bills that it is now the largest one in the entire budget. Public sentiment will certainly sustain a liberal expenditure for pensions, but people are beginning to suspect that there are many fraudulent pensioners upon the rolls and that more care should be exercised in granting this government bounty. Needy applicants are frequently put off from year to year and sometimes denied a pension wholly owing to unnecessary red-tape in the pension bureau. A remedy has been suggested for these evils which consists in publishing the pension rolls in the localities where the pensioners reside. This would be no hardship to meritorious pensioners, and ex-soldiers of this class would have no delicacy in having their names made public. The fact that they have been disabled while in the service of their country would be considered by them as a badge of honor. On the other hand this method would soon exclude from the rolls all persons who had fraudulently obtained the bounty of the government without good reason therefor. Let the pension rolls be made public.

OUR TEXAS LETTER.

GREENVILLE, TEXAS, June 10, 1882.

"We find there are many pleasant days scattered along our pathway in life, and many happy occasions long to be remembered." As you see, I have quoted the above from a communication to the HERALD signed R. who, in giving a description of a picnic given by the Farmers' Social Club at Sand lake, made use of the above language.

Notwithstanding life is interspersed with sunshine as well as shade, there are people who never see and enjoy the sunshine, but who, ghoul-like, always grope in the dark, viewing life in its most dismal aspects. When Shakespeare wrote that "Life is as tedious as a twice told tale

we think he must have been suffering with dyspepsia, for surely we cannot see how any one with a sound mind and good digestion can take such a gloomy view of life. Why so many seek and live in the dark, gloomy caverns of this life and never bask in the health-giving sunlight of joy, is beyond our comprehension. There is so much to enjoy in life.. Such a panorama of beauty above, below and around us, that is really astonishing that so many never seem to see and enjoy it. No where in the vast realm of nature can we direct our gaze but we see the beautiful; if we raise our eyes to the heavens we behold the grand and the beautiful, if we lower them to the earth, beauty in multitudinous form smiles on us—wherever we direct our gaze we behold beauty and grandeur—manifestations of the love of "Our Father, who art in Heaven" toward His children on earth.—The dominion of joy should not be—in fact is not less universal than that of beauty. All animal life is imbued with feelings of joy. From the tiny insect sporting in the sunlight, to the huge whale luxuriating in the briny deep, from the merry whistle of the blow-boy to the ringing laugh of innocent childhood, joy is the natural element and expression of all animal life. We know there are many sorrows and trials "scattered along our pathway in life," yet after a calm and dispassionate survey we hesitate not to assert that this is a very beautiful and happy world; and that the image of its maker is reflected, if not with perfect serenity, yet very brightly and very beautifully from a world begotten by His love and now not altogether unworthy His fatherly complacency and care. The sorrows we endure have been brought on by violation of moral, physical and divine laws.

R. says he "would have been glad to welcome Texas" to that picnic. I can assure R. the pleasure would have been mutual. I know of nothing that would give me more pleasure than to gaze once more upon the limped watwee and Jackson counties, like so many pearls. Ah! how many bright associations cluster around those well remembered localities; how many happy hours have sped away on rosy wings while I have lingered around those Elysian scenes, the memory of which clings to me wherever I go. I can truly say of those times:

"There are moments of life that we never forget,
Which brighten and brighten as time steals away;
They give a new charm to the happiest lot,
And they shine on the gloom of the loneliest day."

How well I should be pleased to meet and greet friends there with whom, in times past, I had the kindliest relations—to gaze again on familiar localities and objects, thoughts of which lead me to exclaim:

"Oh! friends regretted, scenes forever dear,
Remembrance hails you with her warmest tear!
Drooping she bends o'er pensive Fancy's urn,
To trace the hours which never can return."

R. says "when L. F. Wheeler takes those pictures" one will be sent down. I have been in hopes that I would have received those pictures before this, but I have looked and waited in vain. Now don't delay too long as "Hope long deferred maketh the heart sick." L. F. Wheeler is not unknown to me if he is Lavern Wheeler, whom I knew when he was a small boy. I knew his father and mother. I well remember the struggles he and his mother had in former years; deprived of a husband's and father's love and protecting care by the inexorable hand of death. Vern was thrown upon the world to rise or fall as he chose to elect. He has arisen notwithstanding adverse circumstances and he should receive the plaudits of all who admire pluck and perseverance in a straight-forward, manly and honorable course. I saw some of Lavern's first efforts as an artist—in fact, had some in my possession—and if he has improved the talents his first efforts indicated he possessed, he must now be an artist of ability.

If local news from this section would be of any interest to your readers I could dish up an abundance of such weekly, but of course it would be of no special interest. However a transaction occurred here on Saturday night, June 3d, in which one of our leading dry goods merchants was murdered in cold blood. It occurred between 10 and 11 o'clock. He was in the act of closing the store when a young man who had but recently arrived in town, from the county which joins us on the east, requested the merchant to treat to lager beer, which he declined to do, whereupon the young fellow deliberately shot him down. Some time previous to this a man was deliberately shot down on the pavement just across the street on an opposite corner, because he refused to dance when requested to do so by a cow boy, stating that he could not dance, whereupon the cow boy "shot him down on the spot." Of course those men were to blame for being so unaccommodating and ungentlemanly as to refuse to perform such simple acts as treating and dancing when requested to do so, and no unbiased mind but will exonerate the gentlemen who did the killing from all censure in the transaction. As soon as your correspondent found that a person was expected to dance when requested to do so, he procured the services of a dancing master at once to instruct him in the art terpsichorean, he never having been educated "to trip the light, fantastic toe;" but now he thinks if he has a "call" he can "fill it;" perhaps not so gracefully as some, yet he hopes in a manner acceptable. Since the transaction of the other night, if I am requested "to treat," I respond with alacrity, making no demur for fear such an ungentlemanly proceeding on my part might cause an "unpleasantness," and create a "bloody chasm" across which it would be impossible "to shake hands."

I have been much amused reading "My Amateur Farm." Perhaps the reason I take so much interest in those articles is the fact that I am engaged in the same line. I have learned this much about amateur farming: a person who engages in it needs abundance of cash and a large stock of patience to start in on. If he have both, it is only a question of time, nine cases out of ten, when his cash will be exhausted and his patience worn out. But I must bring my letter to a close as it is much more lengthy now than I intended when I commenced it.—However let me close by saying: I wish you and the entire Club were down here now to assist me in disposing of some of the luscious peaches and melons I have on hand.

New Discovery for Piles. A new remedy for this dreadful disease has been discovered by Dr. Deming. A single application will convince the most skeptical of its most wonderful healing power. By calling on any of the druggists, you can obtain a sample box free of charge, which will satisfy you of its curative qualities.

The good book says "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," but Michigan farmers who paid a big price for Western seed this year, and saw crops of wild mustard come up, begin to think that either a new version or better seed is wanted in this country.

Mr. A. Kiefer—My Dear Sir:—I have been afflicted for the last four years with derangement of the Liver, causing Dyspepsia, Headache, Nausea, and general derangement of the whole system. I have tried a great many preparations, but found no relief until I tried one bottle of your Taraxine, which has permanently cured me. I also found it to be good for the Ague. I commend it to all who suffer with derangement of the liver. Very truly yours, Rev. Thomas Whitlock.

The Cost of It.

If the total cost of sickness simply in its business aspects were reckoned up, it would be found to be great enough in five years to pay the national debt. The merchant has a headache, from a fit of indigestion, and misses a good bargain. The lawyer does the same with a case. To say nothing about doctor's fees, etc., it don't pay to be even a little sick. Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is a friend of the business man, for it clears his brain. SPLENDID corn weather.

THRESHING has commenced in this vicinity. Two machines started near Tecumseh yesterday.

JOE SAGE and Johnny Casey will give a harvest dance in their hall at Pennington's corners, on Thursday evening, Aug. 3. Music by Keyser & Macham's full band. Mart Sickley and Rice Hendershot will officiate as floor managers, and the bill will be just one dollar. Cheap enough for the fun to be had.

S. P. HOSMER and Ed Hough have bought out J. H. Sherrard and took possession last Saturday. Perry is a fine business man and one who enjoys an extensive acquaintance in this section of the country, while Ed is a first-class practical jeweler, and equally as competent to manage his department of the business. They will make a strong team.

TUESDAY forenoon last, while Wesley B. Keyser was driving his binder, he stopped to arrange something that got out of place in the elevator.—While at work the horses started and threw the machine in gear, and the three fingers of his right hand were badly jammed. He was in town yesterday apparently not at all disconcerted over the accident, although "the boys" will have his part of the farm work to do for several days.

Shade Trees.

We find the following in the Hillsdale Standard. The authorities in some towns have held differently, we believe: "In answer to the many recent inquiries as to who own the shade trees planted and reared on the streets, by referring to the compiled laws of the state of Michigan, sections 1316 to 1318 inclusive, it will be found, the owners of the lots adjacent thereto are the only owners of said shade trees, and may hold any person or persons responsible for any damage to them. A case in the supreme court of Clark vs. Dasso and many others, for damages to shade trees, gave the complainant judgment. See 34th supreme court reports, page 86. Persons have a legal right to protect shade trees adjacent to their property."

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH. JULY 27, 1882.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

THE pay car went over the Branch yesterday.

TOLEDO will soon have another daily paper.

WEB ANDERSON returned from Petoskey Tuesday night.

MISS GRACE DEWOLF is visiting Miss Jessie VanCourt, of Detroit.

DR. E. M. CONKLIN will go to Petoskey next week for a short vacation.

NEARLY all the pretty girls of Tecumseh are rusticating at Sand lake this week.

WILLIS MERRITT was home from Washington on a brief business trip last week.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will preach on Sabbath evening on "The value of a purpose."

Deputy Marshal John Storch started last Monday for Denver, Colo., for a two weeks' trip.

HUCKLEBERRIES are quite plenty in this market and they are sold at a reasonable figure too.

ALL parties indebted to Miss Chadwick are requested to call and settle at their earliest convenience.

LAST Monday Wm. Totten left Tecumseh for Petoskey where he will remain a number of weeks.

JOHN GREGORY, of Adrian, has bought Rundell's livery at Clinton and will take possession at once.

DR. R. B. HOUSE and family went to Sand lake yesterday morning to remain the balance of this week.

WRIGHT'S drug store is putting on a new appearance,—new paint, decorations, &c. "When the cat is away the mice will play."

UNCLE JOHN SCHREDER was in town last Wednesday for the first time in four months, having just recovered from a severe sickness.

GEORGE PARDINGTON has gone to Buffalo to spend two weeks and then goes to the Chautauqua assembly meeting for a few days.

STEWART J. SMYTH, of Philadelphia, a cousin of James Smyth, of this village, arrived in town to-day and will visit here a few weeks.

BERT CATLIN has received a call to spend a month at Harper Hospital, in Detroit, filling the place of an attendant who is off on a vacation.

MRS. WM. HAMILTON, of Dundee, N. Y., who has been visiting friends in this vicinity for a few weeks past returned to her home last Thursday.

WM. HAYDEN purchased 600 bushels of new wheat of Abner Wilson yesterday, and has it now made into flour. The wheat averaged 65 lbs. to the bushel.

CUB BERDAN, of Detroit, was in town last Tuesday. Since he opened his music store in Detroit he has furnished fifty-six bands with musical instruments.

REV. J. C. ROONEY, pastor of Fremont Ave. Baptist church, Bay City, is in town enjoying a vacation and visiting his relatives, the families of T. and H. Mills.

THE village marshal has collected about $1,700 of village taxes up to date. Next Saturday will terminate the limit within which a reduction of two per cent. will be made.

GAINSLEY & Co., are preparing for their great annual clearing sale before removing their stock into the Patterson block. For full particulars see their ad. on the fourth page.

THE Adrian, Coldwater and Tecumseh companies M. S. T. will go to the Brighton camp ground over the Lake Shore road to Fetterman, and from there via. the Toledo & Ann Arbor road.

THE members of Co. C can rely upon having a pleasant trip at the forthcoming encampment. In addition to the regular rations we learn that Hangsterfer, of Ann Arbor, will have on hand in the pavillion upon the grounds near the encampment a full supply of groceries, vegetables, ready prepared refreshments, cigars, etc.—The goods will be first-class and no fancy prices will be charged.

THE recent advance in Canada Southern stock is attributed to the efforts of Jay Gould to secure a controlling interest in that road. If he succeeds he will operate it in connection with the Wabash. This would give him a direct outlet both from Toledo and Detroit to Buffalo, entirely independent of the Vanderbilt lines, and give him an independent through line from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

THE National Relief and Accident Association of this village have just levied their first assessment for a death loss. The company has been doing business for eight months, has a membership of several hundred, and the first loss has just been reported—Jemima Lant, of Portland, Mich., who died of enlargement of the liver. This is a remarkably good record. The care used by the officers in taking none but sound lives is one of the chief causes of their success thus far.

THE Methodists of Morenci will renovate and improve their church by replacing the old high back pews with modern seats.

THE Branch County Record and Coldwater Sentinel have been purchased by a stock company and the consolidated paper will be run as a Greenback sheet.

JOHN R. CLARK is drawing large crowds at Hamilton, Ontario, and they want him to stay another week. He delivered his "To and Fro" there the 187th time.

MRS. CAWLEY, of Morenci, who has been in Tecumseh for several weeks under the treatment of Dr. Hamilton, has improved to such an extent that she will soon return home.

LAST Saturday everybody waited till sundown before coming to town, and in the evening Chicago street and the stores were literally overrun.—One would have supposed it was 4th of July or circus day.

THE Hudson Gazette keeps up its warfare upon the paving job in that village. It begins to look as though the members of the Council who contracted for the work would be obliged to foot the bills themselves.

REV. C. E. CONLEY and wife have been absent from town for three weeks, during which time they visited the White Mountains, Boston, Quebec and Montreal. They returned last Tuesday evening. Regular services in the Baptist church on Sunday next.

Adrian Press: Clinton's town pump works well enough, but the water from the well is a little dogmatic, and unfit for palatable drink. It is thought the number of dead toads, frogs, and heroic cats, is greater than is compatible with purity, and exceeds the usual allowance.

Deerfield Record: A natural curiosity was on exhibition at Burnham & Porter's store the other day. It was an old potato found in their cellar, with four small potatoes growing on the outside that germinated on the inside and had burst the potato and forced their way out.

Adrian Press: Addison village is called "coontown" because in 1840 it was a heavy whig precinct, and that year coonskins were the emblem of the party, and as they dangled from nearly every place in the village, Thos. McCourtie nick-named it "coontown." So says our friend, A. C. Osborn.

MR. AND MRS. J. H. DARLING who have lately resided in Detroit leave this week for their new home at St. Paul, where he has accepted a position on government work connected with improvements in the upper Mississippi river. Their friends in Tecumseh and Macon will doubtless be glad to hear of Mr. Darling's good fortune.

Blissfield Advance: There is a canvass being made in this county for the nomination of Hon. J. K. Boies, of Hudson, for congress. Mr. Boies has many friends here who would like to see him in the halls of Congress, and there will probably not be much difficulty in securing a delegation for him from Blissfield. His qualifications are undisputed.

WM. LEIGH, who has bought Chris. Schmidt's bakery in the Kennedy block, has been renovating the store, rebuilding the oven and will be ready to wait upon customers on Saturday next. He intends to keep on hand the best quality of bread, pastry, confectionery, etc. He will make a specilty of wedding cakes and pastry for parties. Read his new card on first page and give him a call.

Morenci Observer: We are convinced that farming in a small way can be made to pay, after looking over the farm of C. S. Ingals, which contains only 25 acres, 22 being tillable land. His corn looks splendid, being far in advance of any we have seen this season. Three acres of wheat, just cut, will yield at least 90 bus.; and his oats, potatoes and garden are in fine condition. He has a large apiary that will give him a profitable quantity of honey. Mr. Ingals tells us that he marketed off this little farm last year $839 worth of produce. Who can beat it?

The Chairmen of the Boards of School Inspectors of the several townships of said county, will meet at the office of the County Clerk in the city of Adrian, on Tuesday, August 1, 1882, at 1:30 o'clock, as required by law.

STRONG & MCNAIR have a new advertisement this week.

REGULAR communication of Tecumseh masonic lodge on to-morrow evening. Work on 3rd degree.

MR. I. L. PALMER, a trance speaker, will lecture at Pennington's Corners, Sunday evening, July 30, in Sage & Carey's hall.

C. W. CLOUGH, of the Brooklyn Exponent, drove overland to Tecumseh last Saturday. He found it a fine drive through a beautiful section of country. We acknowledge a friendly call from him while here.

WE are indebted to L. F. Wheeler for a fine view of the State Sunday School Convention held here in June. The members of the convention are gathered on the Opera House steps, the Opera House and bill boards for a back ground. One bill board contains a picture of Forepaugh's circus and the other the Victoria Loftus blondes.

AUGUST is the great traveling month. In August everybody wants to go somewhere else. But there are a great many people who can only go to four or five places, or perhaps only a very short distance, and some people can not get away till next year. So St. Nicholas has made the August issue a great travel number. Its stories and articles deal of persons and things all over the world. And the stay-at-home folk can pick out a cool corner, when they find one, and go from Norway to Turkey, from Egypt to Lake George, without any of the worry and inconvenience of boats and trains, of stages, sledges or camels.

JOHN R. CLARK has opened his temperance campaign at Hamilton, Ontario. The Times of July 15 gives him this generous notice:

John R. Clark gave his third address in this city on temperance at the Tent last evening to a large and attentive audience, who showed their appreciation by frequent applause. The address dealt mainly with the question of the possibility of reformation of all who are slaves to the passion of strong drink, no matter how low they may have fallen, and the power for good such men may afterwards exert, instancing J. B. Gough, Francis Murphy and others. The speaker gave great praise to the work being done by the W. C. T. U., a member of which was the means of saving him, when almost everybody else had given him up, showing the value of persistence in efforts to save. The address was replete with humorous and pathetic illustrations and many eloquent passages. Mr. Clark also sang a temperance solo in the Yorkshire dialect, which was received with loud applause.

IN the North American Review for August, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher writes of "Progress in Religious Thought," pointing out the many influences, social, educational and scientific, which are by degrees transforming the whole structure of dogmatic belief and teaching. T. V. Powderly, the official head of the Knights of Labor, the strongest union of workingmen in the United States, contributes a temperate article on "The Organization of Labor." The well-known British military correspondent, Archibald Forbes, writes of "The United States Army," dwelling more particularly on those features of our army management which appear to him to be most worthy of imitation by the military governments of Europe. "Woman's Work and Woman's Wages," by Charles W. Elliott. The Review is sold by booksellers generally.

TELEPHONE TALK.

Since publishing our list of subscribers last week three more names have been obtained:

A. L. Brewer—Residence.
Village Council—Engineer's house.
H. E. Stout.
James Cole—Meat market.

These names should properly be placed in the original list as their instruments were placed before the local work was completed. The instruments seem to be all working satisfactorily, as far as reported, and we anticipate no further trouble with them.

Subscribers are sometimes subjected to a short delay in calling the central office. For instance, No. 3 calls No. 8 and they begin a conversation. Then No. 14 calls No. 8. Of course No. 8 cannot be connected until the talk then in progress is finished. Sometimes two or three conversations are carried on at once and this so crowds the operator that it occasions a delay in answering. Short delays of this kind are unavoidable and subscribers can readily adapt themselves to them, when the reasons therefor are understood.

THE FIRST CONVERSATION over the local lines as nearly as our reporter could gather it was this:

L. W.—"Hello!"

Dr. H.—"What's wanted?"

L. W.—If a boy should be taken with a violent fit of coughing and choking, should his mother take him down to the drug store and have Jimmy Patterson on the back?"

Dr. H.—"I think Gus would say it was not Wright and she Orr to do something else with the kid."

L. W.—"When you get that joke well mixed, Baker & Hall her off to some restaurant. It would make a good meal."

Dr. H.—"If you Waldo your Doty, you'll dry up and let the kid choke."

L. W.—"Good bye."

MY AMATEUR FARM.

THIRTEENTH WEEK.

Methinks, I have a great desire to a bottle of hay; good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.
—MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

De sheep mighty likely when he grazin' in de medder;
But de nigger and his little gal sittin' down to geddder,
Jes' happy as a cricket in de sunshiny wedder.
—J. A. MACON.

"Now then," said Columbus, as he brushed his stove-pipe hat with a shoe brush and put on a clean pair of overalls, preparatory to going fishing on Sunday morning, "the heft o' this week's business will be cuttin' and curin' the hay, and here you'll find that a well posted man like me is worth his weight in gold. Hayin' is my forte. I s'pose there aint ten men in Canada of my age who've done more hayin' than I have. To hay it, as it ought to be hayed, is a science, young man, that many men who call themselves farmers know nothin' about. In the first place to hay it properly, a man needs a good scythe. These new fangled mowin' machines may do when the stumps is all pulled, and a man has raked over his medder with a garden rake before puttin' the seed in, but a good scythe will take down the grass round the trees and stumps, in the fence corners, on the hummocks and in the hollers, across the dead furrows and over the cobble stuns. In short it will cut the grass, and the first requisite in makin' hay is to get your grass cut. I see you've got four old scythes hangin' up in the barn, but I would'nt take one of 'em as a gift. I s'pose however you're just Yankee enough to want to cut your grass with a mowin' machine. And I can use 'em if drove to it. I give you my views and then you can be your own boss. Many a man has had a hand or a foot cut off with a mowin' machine, and I would'nt lose a limb, as rheumatickey as they be, for all the hay you've got on the farm. Still, if you're bound to run your mowin' machine, I'll go ahead. I never seen a machine yet I could'nt handle. Why, my dear sir, I sold agricultural implements three years once over'n Canada, and I've set up scores of mowin' machines worth a dozen like your'n. But I shall take half a day to examine your mowin' machine and put it in order. The next thing to be did, after cuttin' the grass is to cure it properly. And I never seen a Yankee farmer yet who cured his hay as it ought to be. Everything in this country is done in a hurry. After cuttin' the hay it should lay twenty-four hours and get the dew on it one night. The next day it should be turned over once with a four tined fork. The next day it should be raked into windrows with a double treadle lightning revolving hickory tooth hoss rake. The next day it should be rolled into bunches five feet high and ten feet in circumference with a man and a boy, a wooden rake and a two tined fork. The next day four bunches should be piled into one. Durin' the next three days you should let 'er sweat. The essentials to makin' good hay is heat and moisture, wind and weather. After the sweatin' process is finished, the hay should be drawed into small ricks, about one ton to a rick. These ricks should dry out about ten days, and the hay can be hauled into the barn with a hoss fork. If you want hay, young man, that'll raise prize calves and premium butter just—" then the baby tumbled down the cellar stairs, which put an end to the lecture on hay-making and the fishing excursion both for that day.

Monday, June 27th.—Columbus overhauled the mowing machine, made a new pair of hickory linch pins for the drive wheels, put an edge on the bar sections with a whet-stone, dusted off the cog-wheels, sand papered the neckyoke, made a corn-husk cushion for the seat, put a coat of whitewash on the whiffletrees, and got everything in applepie order to commence cutting grass bright and early to-morrow morning. Ellic helped pick strawberries and took charge of the pickers.

Tuesday, June 28th.—Columbus hitched the team to the mower and went into the hay-field to cut grass. During the trip to the field the bolt which holds the knife bar dropped out and broke, so he had to go to town for a new bolt. He got started about nine o'clock. At the second round he thought best to oil the machine, and found he had no oil. Oil is so greasy that it had slipped his mind. He went to town and got a new oil can and a pint of bear's oil. Most people use lard oil for mowers, but Ichabod says that bear's oil is better for the machinery, and will go twice as far. He then went a second round, ran into a stump and broke four sections of the mowing bar. As we had no extra sections on hand, he went to town and bought half a dozen new ones. He started on the third round about eleven o'clock. The dog, Tiger, had been rendering what assistance he could during the forenoon, and while fooling round in front of the knives, one fore foot got entangled in the knife bar and was taken half off. Tiger's yells soon brought the rest of the family to the scene. A veterinary surgeon was sent for at once, and the family medicine chest was emptied of its contents to find something to stop the flow of blood. Upon the arrival of the doctor he bound Tiger's leg up in splinters, wrapped it in cloths saturated with bone-set tea and arnica water and left a supply of Grandma Wheeler's Eureka Salve to be used the next day. Ichabod swore that he would'nt drive that mowing machine another step, but after a good square dinner of pork and beet greens, he relented, and started on the fourth round about two o'clock. No further delay occurred except when Ichabod had to go to the house for a drink, and as the weather was sultry he needed a pint of fresh water with a tablespoonful of vinegar and ginger in it every half hour. But he got one acre of grass down before sundown. Ellic hoed in the potato patch, except when he went to get the doctor for Tiger.

Wednesday, June 29th.—A smart shower last night. Columbus cradled the quarter acre of rye in the forenoon. After dinner he turned out the hay cut yesterday. I got a new four-tined fork with a shovel handle for this work. Ichabod says it is impossible to turn out hay properly with a two or three-tined fork. Ellic made himself useful among the weeds in the garden.

Thursday, June 30th.—Columbus cut another acre of grass in the forenoon. In the afternoon he and Ellic raked and cocked the grass cut on Tuesday.

Friday, July 1st.—Columbus cut more grass in the forenoon. After dinner he and Ellic turned out yesterday's cutting and doubled up the cocks already put up.

Saturday, July 2d.—Ellic and Ichabod drew in Tuesday's hay and doubled the bunches on the remainder. Got five bags of fine middlings and another box of Eureka Salve for Tiger.

De newly mown hay am a sweatin' in de medder;
De melyans gettin' bigger, an' de currants gettin' redder;
And Tiger's foot an leg am a hitchin' right together.

Farming to the Front.

Never before have there been so many people of all classes taking a strong, direct, personal interest in the agricultural situation and prospects. Business men, bankers, capitalists, stock brokers, merchants, mechanics, manufacturers, operatives, and day laborers even, are watching the daily bulletins and reports of the weather, with especial reference as to how it is affecting the growing wheat, corn, and oats, and the further planting of corn. Never before have they seen so clearly that farming is the real basis of all other business, and that upon it rests the prosperity of the country. They now comprehend the fact that it was the good crops of 1879, 1880 and 1881, from the export of which we received so many hundreds of millions of dollars from other lands, which changed the financial depression of 1873, and the years following, into a prosperous activity extending through all branches of trade and manufacture. Every extra bushel of wheat or corn, or pound of meat, cheese and butter that went to market helped turn the scale. The hundreds of millions of bushels of grain that came from the interior to the seaboard, gave profitable employment to the railroads. These bought and used more cars, more iron, more steel, and the makers of these, from head director to the lowest laborer, received more wages and more constant employment, and they purchased more freely those articles that go to supply the necessities and comforts of every-day life. This stimulated and increased the mercantile trade, and made heavier demands upon all kinds of manufactured commodities. The farmers who received the proceeds were able to reduce debts upon their farms; to buy more and better implements; to pay up their store debts, and to buy more freely from the merchants. The merchants and shopkeepers were in turn able to pay up their debts to wholesale houses, brokers in manufactures, and importers, and to buy larger stocks of goods for cash or on short credits. The carrying of these goods increased the transportation business, and stimulated the building of from 5,000 to 10,000 miles of new railroads per year.

This brief glance at some leading points shows the great and far-reaching influence of prosperity to farmers. On the other hand, the unfavorable winter and spring and summer drouths of 1881 cut down the surplus wheat and corn and meat and dairy products and cotton many score millions in value. This of course diminished export, and has started gold abroad; it has decreased the ability of farmers, and all classes of workers, to buy goods and manufactures. The decline in the demand for iron and steel, and the fall in prices, prevent the payment of the wages asked for, and there is now prevailing one of the greatest "strikes" ever known in this country, of laborers who demand higher pay to meet the increased cost of living, due in part to the advance in breadstuffs, consequent upon the lessened crops of last year. Is it any wonder that this state of things has opened the eyes and enlightened the understanding of that half of the people who are not engaged in agriculture, and who have hitherto been inclined to look upon farming as of inferior importance, and suited for clodhoppers? Farming has come to the front, and it is going to stay there.—July American Agriculturist.

Recuperative Power of the Cypress Tree.

In the southern swamps the deciduous cypress sends up knobs from its roots, like straw beehives, apparently to air them by keeping part above water. We have a tree of that variety on our lawn—a sandy loam, where water never comes except when it rains—that continues to push up its round knobs as if it was growing in the Dismal Swamp in Virginia. Perhaps another peculiarity of the cypress may be new to some of our readers. After transplanting, it grew up a beautiful cone, until it reached about forty feet in height, when a storm of sleet and wind broke off about one-third of its length, leaving five of the remaining limbs of equal length—six to nine feet—standing round at an angle of forty-five degrees. Its beauty being destroyed, I only waited for a convenient opportunity to remove it; but I soon observed that one of the five long limbs was turned up and taking the place of the missing top. After its erect position was assumed it grew three feet to its fellows' one, and the tree is now as straight and symmetrical a cone as before its accident, without crook bend or enlargement at the place of fracture. I have noticed two sprigs of one year's growth on evergreens turn up in this way, but did not suppose a limb seven or eight feet long, with many side limbs, and five or six years old, would act in the same way. When the leaves are down, you can see where the break was made, by the upper limb being more slender and the bark smooth.

The Birds in the Early Morning.

The person who rises at 3:30 a.m. in Ogdensburg will hear ten thousand birds, including robins, orioles, swallows, martins, wrens, yellow birds, American sparrows, English sparrows, and every other variety that visit this climate, endeavoring to outdo each other in song. Before 7 o'clock the grand concert is ended. Within a week we have seen a dozen sparrows, three robins, two orioles, and several blackbirds all feeding from the same dish and at the same time, and no quarreling either. The sparrow is the most valuable of all birds. While breeding he feeds his young with grubs, flies, insects, bugs, and caterpillars. He is noisy and social, perhaps a little too much so. All the stories about the pugnacity of this bird are false. Any one who has observed the species enough to distinguish the sexes will, by a little close observation, discover how much he has been deluded about the fighting sparrow. You can't hug your bed in the morning and know a great deal about song birds.—Ogdensburg Journal.

Pleading a Dog Case.

"Oh, yes, I am in the nautical line just now," said the captain of a fishing boat on the wharf of New London the other day; "but I'm sort of a Jack-at-all-trades. I own a fish factory and a dozen boats; I am a licensed pilot; I've been in the general assembly of the State of New York, and I'm not a bad lawyer. Do you see that big black nigger down there on the stern of my boat? You do? Well, his name is Jim. He's my best hand. Not long ago I was going up the street of the little town where my fish factory is, over on the island, and I saw Jim leading a black and tan dog by a string. I knew the dog, it belonged to Jake Styles, who lived not far from my fish factory, and it had barked at me every week, if not every day of its life. The day but one afterwards Jim sent for me in great distress. He had been arrested for stealing Styles' dog. I went down to the lock-up, and I said:

"This is a pretty go, Jim. I am needing you the worst way. We are going to have splendid weather, and the boats are all going out to-night. Who have you got to defend you?"

"Me, one," said Jim, dolefully. "I've no money. They'll jug me, for Styles has engaged Esquire Brown."

Now I had a grudge against Brown that I wanted to cross out, so I said:

"Haven't you five friends that will swear that you was over at New London, at a wedding, the day before yesterday, and so couldn't have seen the dog at all?"

"No trouble about that," said Jim. So, when the case was called, I got up and said:

"May it please your honor, I am not a lawyer, but I am here in behalf of this poor unfortunate fellow, and I trust you will take no exceptions, for any one can try a dog case." I waited a little, and then I said:

"I propose to prove to your honor that Jim was not in town the day that Styles claims his dog was stolen."

Thereupon I called the five witnesses. They all told the same straight story, and as the last one left the stand the judge said:

"This case is dismissed," and Jim started off with his wife and children and comrades in high glee. Just as some of the bystanders were congratulating me upon my success and advising me to join the bar, I called to Jim, who was going down the steps, and I said:

"Look here, you black rascal, go and get that dog and bring it back to Styles at once, and I will stand the racket."

Jim turned, rolling up his eyes in dismay.

"None of that," said I. "I saw you lead off the dog. I want to see you leading it back right away."

Brown, the opposing counsel, was on his feet in a minute, his face white as a sheet, but before he could speak, I said:

"Jim was very fortunate in his witnesses. Had he called me my testimony would have convicted him at once. I think we are even now, Mr. Brown; good day."

"Good day, sir," said Brown. But he was mad enough to drown me, and that was natural enough; a fellow don't like to have another get the better of him. I don't myself.

Profitable Politeness.

There was a plainly dressed, elderly lady who was a frequent customer at the then leading dry goods house in Boston. No one in the store knew her even by name. All the clerks but one avoided her, and gave their attention to those who were better dressed and more pretentious. The exception was a young man who had a conscientious regard for duty and system. He never left another customer to wait on the lady, but when at liberty he waited on her with as much attention as if she had been a princess.

This continued a year or two, till the young man became of age. One morning the lady approached the young man, when the following conversation took place:

Lady—"Young man, do you wish to go into business for yourself?"

"Yes, ma'am," he replied, "but I have neither money, credit nor friends."

"Well," continued the lady, "you go and select a good situation, ask what the rent is, and report to me," handing the young man her address.

The young man found a splendid location and a good store; but the landlord required security, which he could not give. Mindful of the lady's request, he forthwith went to her and reported.

"Well," she replied, "you go and tell Mr.—— that I will be responsible."

He went, and the landlord or agent was much surprised, but the bargain was closed.

The next day the lady again called to ascertain the result. The young man told her, but added:

"What am I to do for goods? No one will trust me."

"You may go and see Mr.——, and Mr. ——, and Mr. ——, and tell them to call on me."

He did so, and his store was soon stocked with the best in the market. There are many in this city who remember the circumstances and the man. He died many years ago, and left a fortune of $3,000,000. So much for politeness, so much for treating one's elders with the deference due to age, in whatever garb they are clothed.

Many years ago, Ephraim M. Baynard, a wealthy planter of South Carolina, bequeathed $163,200 to the College of Charleston. And now his grand-nephew, Owen Thomas Baynard, in indigent circumstances, receives back the bread from the waters in the form of a free scholarship from the trustees of the High School, and an annual grant of $300 from the Charleston City Council, to enable him to prepare for college.

Improvement for Mind and Body.

There is more strength-restoring power in a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids consequently find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body.—Commercial.

Artificial Ice.

Every town of any size in the south has its artificial ice factory, and the business is one paying a good profit. The difference in the ice has been tested repeatedly by placing pieces side by side in the sun, and the victory has always been with the artificial ice. It is made after several different processes, but what is called the ammonia process is most common and perhaps involves the least labor.

The water, as pumped from the canal, is the color of a half-burned brick. Let a barrel full of it stand long enough to settle and it will deposit three or four inches of mud at the bottom. It is pumped into condenser No. 1, and when it leaves that for No. 2 it is pretty clear well water. When it has passed No. 2 it has still further improved in color. It passes from No. 2 into what are called the baths. Each bath is a huge, square bin, provided with apertures for holding ninety-six tin cans. These cans are sixteen inches long, four inches thick and about eight inches wide, and may be called molds. They are open at the top, and when filled with the clear, cold water, are placed in the bath or bins, each can in a compartment and a wooden lid falling down over the top. Ammonia gas circulates through the bath in pipes, and salt water is churned to and fro by means of paddles worked by the machinery. It takes seventy pounds of salt to make a "bath" for the three bins, holding 288 molds, and the bath is renewed once a week. One barrel of ammonia lasts from a week to ten days. The factory starts with every mold full of water and placed in the baths, and in a few minutes the hands can begin taking out ice. Each mold is carried to a sink provided with hot water, giving a dip to loosen the ice, and the crystal slab is then slid upon a table. The water is very clear and the ice is consequently as pure as ice can be made. Three slabs, or sixty pounds are placed together, freezing solid in a brief time. One can read the finest print through a considerable thickness of this artificial ice. It sells in Augusta at fifty cents per hundred wholesale, and the factory is run day and night and Sundays through the warm season. At a trial made in Augusta last year the artificial ice lasted two hours longer under the sun than Northern ice. People who used to pay from $3 to $4.50 for Northern ice, and used it eight months in the year, now refuse it at a dollar per hundred. The genius of man has given Nature a set-back in the ice business. The artificial ice is harder, and comes forth in better shape to be handled. A slab of it looks as clear and neat as a cake of loaf-sugar.

Hard and Soft Water.

You often hear of water for household purposes being called "hard" and "soft." The reason why some waters, especially spring water, are hard is owing to the mineral matters dissolved in them.—Rain water is never "hard," because it is nearly free of solid matter. The reason you had such an uncomfortable wash and shave this morning at your friend's house was owing to the water being largely charged with lime and magnesia, and forms compounds which the water cannot dissolve; and hence the provoking curdiness you observed. For the lather to be a perfect one, complete solution of the constituents of the soap must take place, and in pure water waters are permanently hard, while some are only temporarily so. Permanent hardness is caused when the water is charged with sulphate of lime and magnesia. Pure water dissolves the sulphates, but not the carbonates. Then how do the carbonates come to be in the water at all? The reason is this: All natural waters, but especially spring and well water, contain more or less free carbonic acid gas in a state of absorption, and, when thus charged, are capable of dissolving the carbonates; but whenever this gas is expelled from the water, say by boiling it, the carbonates are at once deposited; and this accounts for the incrustation in the kettle; and when this takes place the water becomes quite soft. The boiling does not affect the sulphates to any degree in this way in water that is permanently "hard". Temporarily hard water can be made soft by more means than boiling alone. If a tubful of it at night be stirred up with a little "slaked" lime and allowed to settle, in the morning there will be a white deposit at the bottom of the tub, and the water will be found to be quite "soft," because the lime added will combine with the free carbonic-acid gas in the water, and the whole of the carbonates will become deposited, in virtue of their insolubility in water without this gas.

For drinking purposes, rain-water, after being passed through a charcoal filter, to remove the organic matter it contains, is the most wholesome for adults. The general objection is its tastelessness. A pinch of salt will remedy this. For the young, however, solid matter in the water, of the right kind, such as lime and magnesia, is good, as these go to build up the bony structures of the child.—Chambers' Journal.

A Route Planned Out.

We have an old citizen in this place, writes a correspondent at Industry, Ill., who is very hard of hearing. He has been talking for some time of visiting Germany in the fall. I sat beside him at meeting the other night. After the sermon was over the minister took a turn around the church, shaking hands and talking. Presently he came to the old citizen, and taking his hand he commenced: "My dear old friend, are you thinking of going to heaven?"

"Yah," said the German, "ven I gits my greenpacks changed mit gold."

"You don't understand me," remarked the other. "I mean don't you want to go to heaven?"

"Vell, I tinks not; I vas at New Haven once, and it is a pad place. I believe I goes to Germany in the fall!"

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that

95 Per Cent.

of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a tonic and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes, ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.
IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.
IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 758 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information, address GEO. P. A PLEASANT LETTER.

It Rings of a Grateful Heart and Gives Honor Where Honor is Due.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced everything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote and says: "I have had no pain for six months and I have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you Derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder, associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices Medicine and Surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Is It A Mound-Builder?

Mr. C. A. Beerstecher recently exhumed a skeleton, about three-quarters of a mile east of Nottawa, on the Burr Oak road, near the Bennett farm says the Centreville (Mich.) Republican.—The mound from which it was taken is in the highway, and has been passed by and over by pedestrians and teams for the past forty years. Mr. Beerstecher has known of this mound for some time, but never until the present week made any attempt at an examination of its interior. The skeleton is that of a full-sized man, being from six feet to six feet two or three inches in length. The head is of diminutive size in proportion of the skeleton, and from a physiological standpoint would indicate very little intelligence. The forehead is very low and narrow, while the animal propensities are of the most prominent character. The teeth are very double and massive in the central and back portion of the jaw, the forward and extreme front teeth being very long and narrow. Some of the molars or back back teeth are much worn, seeming to indicate use upon hard substances.—The bones of the skeleton are very large, giving rise to the belief that the once animate possessor was a being of more than ordinary strength. This skeleton is perfect in every part, and is doubtless as good a specimen of this extinct race as can be found in the country. Every cavity of the bones and skull and spinal column was filled with sand or a sort of burned clay, which had worked itself into every conceivable opening in every portion of the skeleton. It was found six feet under ground, in a sitting posture, with the head thrown back and jaws extended to the full capacity. It was facing the north. Over it was found a covering of burned clay, which probably accounts for its excellent preservation, as water could not penetrate it or air in any manner get to it. It is a well-known fact that this is not of any tribe of Indians, as they do not dispose of their dead in that manner. From the most reliable information that can be gained from scientists, the mound-builders were a race supposed to have inhabited Mexico and portions of the United States from eight to eleven hundred years ago.

Effie Ellsler's Joke.

"I don't think that to this day Mr. Raymond knows that I once perpetrated a joke on him. At that time he would have given anything to learn who the author was, for he always retaliates twofold upon those in the profession who make practical fun drives at him. He was playing in St. Louis. I was in the cast. I had heard and seen so much of his jokes that I resolved one day to give him a spoonful of his own medicine. You know that Raymond, before ordering at his meals, is a close student of his bill of fare. And, in contradistinction to the theatrical diet of his "Col. Sellers," he is quite an epicurean in taste. After thinking the matter over I decided to send him a bill of the Mulberry diet. So I had printed in splendid style the fare which most he did not like. Just think—Raymond dining off of turnips! The bill of fare was sent to the hotel, the proprietor was induced to join the conspiracy, and at the table he was delicately handed the delicately printed menu. He read: 'Soup—turnip; turnip; fish—turnips, turnips; roast—turnip; boiled—turnip; entries—turnips; cold—turnip.' Before he had reached the turnip pudding and [illegible] buried his face in his hands, and was heard by the waiter to mutter: 'Good one, good one; wonder who did it.' He then got up from the table and went to a restaurant for his dinner. I know that when he finds out that I am the guilty one, he will play back at me."

A Hint for Coffee Drinkers.

While "dining out" one day recently, the coffee, which, though the last, was by no means the least of the good things furnished, was so unusually excellent that it was the subject of general remark, and a word in the ear of the charming hostess after retiring to the drawing-room called forth the following explanation of how the good result was obtained: The coffee furnished was a clear amber in color, rich in flavor and deliciously aromatic. To give the hostess' method a fair test it will be no more than just to don one's apron and adjourn to the kitchen. The coffee to be used is Maracaibo and Java, equal parts of each, finely ground. One large cup of coffee, one cup of cold water, one well-beaten egg, mix thoroughly; add four cups of cold water and place over the fire. After it reaches the boiling point allow five minutes to finish the process; strain and serve immediately. This seems a very simple process, but in the hands of a servant, if allowed to boil too long, it would be easily spoiled. —Philadelphia Press.

Scarcity.

In the ante-bellum days a New York State grocer raised the price of a certain grade of tea from "three shillings" to forty-five cents, and an old farmer who came in with a barrel of cider-vinegar to sell could hardly credit his sense when told that his favorite brand of tea had advanced several cents per pound.

"What on airth is the reason for this sudden raise?" he inquired.

"Searcity of tea-chests," was the brief answer.

"Well, do you want my vinegar?"

"How much?"

"Eight cents a gallon."

"I only paid you seven for the last."

"Yes; but cider has riz, you see."

"What has brought cider up?" asked the astonished grocer.

"Scarcity of bung-hole plugs," was the quiet but serious reply.

They looked at each other without winking, and then tea dropped back to thirty-eight and cider to seven cents.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time!" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured."

"Tattooing Done Here."

It is a diseased fancy that induces sundry persons to be tattooed with strange devices. Nevertheless, one man, in New York finds that enough men, women and boys are so possessed with the idea as to support him handsomely in the trade of tattooing. A reporter of the New York Tribune, who recently called on him, publishes the following narrative of the interview:

"I suppose sailors are your chief customers?"

"Oh, no. Mechanics, tradesmen and longshoremen are the class of men I do most of my tattooing on. I have customers from all over the United States, all kinds of people, and have even had gentlemen come to my door in their private carriages. I am the only man in the city who has a permanent place of business."

"What designs are the most popular?"

"Well, that is all according to taste or hobby. American sailors like goddesses of liberty, sailors of other nations the coats-of-arms of their country.

"An Indian waving a tomahawk is a great favorite with some tars. Then I've put many knives and cleavers on butchers' arms, hammers and tongs on blacksmiths. Masonic emblems are always in demand.

"Sometimes there are sailors who want the initials of their sweethearts' names put on their arms. Sometimes men who have been jilted by their girls afterward have their names or initials covered with other pictures.

"Young men have the coats-of-arms of their country or State put on. A design of a willow-surrounded tomb with the words, 'To the memory of my mother,' is a great favorite with old men."

"Do many boys come to be tattooed?"

"Sometimes fathers bring their boys and have their names or some mark put on them, so that they can be recognized when stolen or lost.

"A sea-captain was lately drowned in the East River, and his body was only recognized by an India mark on his arm. When I was with the Army of the Potomac I put the names of hundreds of soldiers on their arms or breasts, and many were recognized by these marks after being killed or wounded.

"I learnt my business from an engraver with whom I served on board of the frigate United States during the Mexican War."

"What is the best time of the year for your work?"

"The winter, as the work dries quicker."

A Ludicrous Stage Death Scene.

Camille died last night at the Chestnut street opera house, says the Philadelphia Press, not only to slow music, but to the unrestrained laughter of the audience as well. The death scene was marred by a most ludicrous accident. When the curtain arose for the last act, with Camille discovered lying on a couch partly covered by a furry robe, and the dews of death already gathering on her brow, the house was still and expectant. After leaving the death chamber Gaston re-entered, and the dying woman raised herself to greet him. At that moment there was an ominous creak, and one of the supports of the couch gave way. The actress seemed to grasp the situation instantly, and attempted to conceal the difficulty by heaving a long-drawn sigh, and throwing herself back, but the action only made matters worse. The death-bed gave way at one corner with a crash, and the audience began to titter.—Nichette, the maid, entered at this juncture and [illegible] tress began her part, but the couch giving evidence by numerous groans of its instability, she arose and wheeled a chair up for the dying Camille's accommodation. By this time the audience had fully appreciated the funniness of the situation and were laughing very audibly, but when Gaston approached, and he, together with the maid and the dying woman, could not control their countenances, the audience fairly roared. Camille, after dying in Armand's arms, was deposited in the easy chair instead of the couch, and appeared as a very smiling corpse.

Why Johnson Stayed a Week.

Last August Mr. Johnson with his wife, who had been doing the pleasure resorts for two months, arrived at the quiet town of X., in New Hampshire, where a small hotel, pleasantly situated and very cleanly, offered him hospitality. After supper the landlord walked the piazza, and was accosted by Mr. Johnson, when the following dialogue took place:

"Where's your sun-set hill?"

"Haven't got any."

"Is the Devil's Gulch near here?"

"Never heard of it."

"How far is it to Lover's Leap?"

"Must be fifty miles, but I don't know."

"Is the Silver Cascade running?"

"Don't know; never knew it was around here."

"How far is it to the springs?"

"Didn't know we had any hereabouts."

"The attractions of this place are very few, it appears."

"Mighty few and getting scarcer."

"Wife, this is just the place we have been seeking. There is nothing to see and we will stay here a week."—Boston Journal.

The Salt Lake City Tribune says: "A heartless brute in San Francisco the other day threw a Newfoundland dog from the second story of a building upon the sidewalk below, crushing and mangling the poor brute so that it had to be killed. For this piece of fiendishness he was punished by a fine of $10! It is well for him that circumstances will not throw him in his victim's way in the next world; for, if dogs really have souls, the spirit of that one will go where his murderer cannot hope to."

Colorless and Cold.—A young girl deeply regretted that she was so colorless and cold. Her face was too white and her hands and feet felt as though the blood did not circulate. After one bottle of Hop Bitters had been taken she was the roslest and healthiest girl in the town, with a vivacity and cheerfulness of mind gratifying to her friends.

Chicago to Denver.

The first and only through line. Official announcement reaches our office fixing the 2d of July as the opening day of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. through line from Chicago, Peoria or St. Louis to Denver.—The trains on the new line will be equipped in the style of comfort and elegance, for which the "Burlington Route" is noted. To our many readers who have been anxiously awaiting for the announcement of this date and who intend to turn their steps towards the setting sun, we can confidently say, judging the present and future by the past, that they will find on this line all the attention to the minutest details, which have made the name of the C. B. & Q. a household word throughout the Union, and insure to travelers speed, safety and luxury.—Have your tickets read via. "Burlington Route."

The Doctor's Secret.

Probably no new development will more surprise the public, than to learn the secret of success of leading physicians. When they have a difficult case of throat or lung disease that baffles their scientific skill, they prescribe Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, having it disguised in a prescription bottle, with their own directions and name attached. The patient is cured and they get the credit.—Tribune. Sold by all druggists.

Burglars raided the house of Dr. Gillam, at St. Johns, on the night of the 11th, and stole the doctor's breeches and $15 in cash.

It seems impossible that a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., should make so many and such great cures as Hop Bitters do; but when old and young, rich and poor, pastor and doctor, lawyer and editor, all testify to having been cured by them, you must believe and try them yourself, and doubt no longer.

Free to Everyone.

A 10c sample of Hill's Peerless Cough Syrup. We also sell the large bottles on an absolute guarantee. If not satisfied after using, return the empty bottle and we will refund your money. We also sell the Peerless [illegible] No cure, no pay. Cobbs' Little Podophyllin Pills will cure headache, biliousness and constipation. No pay. One pill a dose.

Twenty-five electric lamps are being placed in the mining exposition building at Denver, which is to open next week. Utah has contributed a block of refined silver valued at $118,000. There are three samples of high-grade ore weighing over a ton each.

The socialists of Chicago on Sunday held a meeting in honor of John McAuliffe, an agitator who took his own life at Denver. Morgan, one of the speakers, thought McAuliffe should have made his end glorious by sacrificing some man whose life was infamous.

Miss Emily MacTavish, of Baltimore, a granddaughter of General Winfield Scott, and a prominent society lady, entered a convent last May, and was on Sunday invested with the nun's habit, under the name of Sister Mary Agnes. The lady is exceedingly handsome, finely educated, and has a private fortune of $500,000.

The almshouse at Erie, Pa., which contains three hundred paupers, is heated and lighted by natural gas. An idiotic inmate got into the boiler-room and turned on the supply valves, and was nearly disemboweled by the explosion which followed, the building being partly wrecked.

The corn exchange of Little Rock passed resolutions declaring that state quarantine regulations against yellow fever can not be a proper safeguard to life or to business interests, and asking Senator Garland to do his utmost for federal regulations and inspection.

A Washington journal asserts that there are traces of a scheme by New York stock brokers to unload Northern Pacific securities in advance of expected hostile legislation, and that members of congress are interested in the job.

The funeral of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was held Wednesday morning at the First Presbyterian church in Springfield. Among the pall-bearers were Governor Cullom and General McClernand. The remains were placed in the vault at the monument.

In the star-route cases at Washington, Mr. Merrick announced that the time had arrived when the court would be compelled to pass upon the sufficiency of evidence to sustain the charge of conspiracy. Judge Wylie ordered that argument on each side be confined to three hours.

The works of the Brown Manufacturing company at Zanesville, O., covering a railroad and river frontage of five hundred feet, were on Sunday swept away by an incendiary fire, causing a loss of $125,000, including twelve hundred wagons and cultivators.

Four drunken men, three American sea captains and an Austrian, while on a spree in Ningpo, China, nearly murdered the captain of a war junk, and placed in great peril the lives of all foreigners. The Americans have been committed to await the result of the officer's injuries.

The rainy weather in Ireland is likely to destroy what promised to be the finest grain harvest ever reaped. Potatoes have also suffered greatly.

The Ohio insurance superintendent caused the arrest for perjury of Hon. J. B. Hall and H. N. Henderson, president and secretary of the Home Insurance company of Columbus, and each was held in $2,000. They returned the assets last January at $250,000, when they were only $100,000.

The United States circuit court at New York, in banc, has affirmed the constitutionality of the law prohibiting government officials from collecting political assessments. General Newton M. Curtis was denied a new trial and fined $1,000. His counsel will make an application to Chief Justice Waite for habeas corpus.

Major Chaffee, who has been following the renegade Indians from San Carlos, surprised them on Tuesday near Fort Verde, Arizona, killed twenty-six and capturing all their equipage and thirty-two horses. Lieutenants Morgan and Converse, of the 3d cavalry, were wounded, and one enlisted man was killed.

The Texas democracy nominated John Ireland for governor, as Governor Roberts telegraphed a protest against the use of his name. The platform declares against national banks, and in favor of a free vote and a fair count, and demands from the national government protection for citizens at home and abroad.

A. J. Kinlock, the dissipated younger son of a Scottish nobleman, has for three years been in the clutches of a hotel-keeper at Kansas City, who managed to secure the allowance of $2,000 per annum regularly forwarded from Edinburgh. When Kinloch became too ill to move about Coyne had two negroes place him on the train for New York, where he died at a police station.

About two months ago, W. B. Strong, president of the Santa Fe road, was attacked by a large abscess just back of the left eye. An ineffectual operation served only to give temporary relief. Three surgeons then held a council on the case, and made an opening one and one-half inches long, which revealed the fact that the bones were rapidly becoming diseased. Mr. Strong is now steadily progressing toward recovery, but his physicians insist upon absolute rest for several months.

A farmer applied Wednesday at Castle Garden for a married couple, offering $25 per month and board. There being none on the market, he asked permission to speak to some applicants for employment. In a short time he arranged a marriage between two reputable Germans, aged 24 and 18, who were total strangers, and the knot was tied in his presence, the farmer making them a wedding present of $5.

Two years ago, at Millville, Mo., Dr. Roberts was murdered by Dr. Keyes, the latter being sent to the insane asylum, whence he was released last Thursday. When he made his appearance at the scene of the murder he was promptly shot dead by a son of Dr. Roberts, who surrendered to the officers.

The Ohio democratic state convention renominated Hon. John W. Oakley for supreme court judge, J. W. Newman for secretary of state, and Henry Weible for member of the board of public works. John G. Thompson was defeated for member of the central committee, while his rival for the chairmanship, J. H. Farley, was selected to represent the Twenty-first district, but Thompson was elected chairman of the executive committee.

The advisory trunk-line commission, comprising Messrs. Thurman, Washburne, and Cooley, reports that no evidence has been offered that existing differences operate to the prejudice of any of the seaboard cities, and the commission can not advise their being disturbed until they operate inequitably or force trade in an unnatural direction. The recommendation is made that the roads should keep and submit to each other accurate statistics in regard to their business, and that no seaboard city should be subjected to unfair charges or arbitrary regulations.

De Freycinet, in opening the debate in the French chamber of deputies on the Egyptian question, expressed the belief that armed intervention had become imperative by the massacre of French subjects in Alexandria. The English alliance, he said, had never been shaken. The Suez canal cannot cease to be free, even if France must be one of the powers to protect it. Gambetta censured the cabinet for accepting Turkish intervention without guarantees against collusion with the Egyptians, but declared that he would vote for the grant.

A child of three years was abducted from the mansion of Melvyn Smith, at Montreal, and pinned to its cot was found a note demanding a ransom of $10,000 within two days or the boy would be killed. The villains passed through the bedroom of the mother with their prey. The same gang once robbed Mr. Smith of jewels valued at $20,000, part of which he recovered by settling with the thieves for $1,000. At a late hour Tuesday evening the child was found standing alone on a doorstep a mile from home.

The khedive has signed a decree declaring Arabi Pasha a rebel, and forbidding the people to pay him taxes. The Mahmoudien canal has fallen fourteen inches, and no water has been supplied to the public since Sunday. The mail steamer from Constantinople has been embargoed on suspicion of carrying letters to Arabi Pasha, and is guarded by four British steam launches. A proclamation by the khedive asks the people to assist the English in promoting the real interests of Egypt. The troop-ship Malabar, with eleven hundred British infantry and a battery, arrived at Alexandria Sunday evening. There are said to be eight thousand destitute persons camping in the gardens at Cairo. Arabi Pasha has massed seven hundred cavalry and a field gun at the pumping station of the Ramleh water-works, with the evident intention of destroying it.

In its issue of July 5 the London Times gave some disclosures in regard to the operations of the dynamite section of the Fenian party, whose main offices are in New York and Chicago. Dr. Shine, of the former city, is credited with the leadership, and is believed to control funds amounting to $20,000 at a time. A plot is said to have been matured to capture Princess Louise on a projected trip to Manitoba, but she remained in England because of a warning. Plans were laid to blow up the floating dock at Bermuda, and men were actually at work in that port. O'Donovan Rossa tells the New York reporters that the greater portion of the article is true, and that a dynamite school is in operation.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Lieut. Schwatka, the Arctic explorer, is at the Providence hospital, quite ill with malarial fever.

It is said that Senator Logan and others in the Senate are preparing to make a vigorous fight against the reduction of the tobacco tax.

Senator Sherman has given notice of his intention to move to strike out of the naval appropriation bill all the extra legislation, which would render useless a year's labor by ex-Secretary Robeson.

Colonel D. R. Anthony and other leading citizens of Leavenworth are hard at work here in the endeavor to secure appropriations of $100,000 for a postoffice and $50,000 to reconstruct the buildings burned at the fort.

The treasury department has decided that the bill to extend the charters of national banks will entitle the holders of new 3 per cent. bonds to perpetuate the original numbers.

Comptroller Knox reports that forty-nine national banks reorganized by liquidation in advance of the passage of the law to extend their charters. A $5 note of the new design, ornamented with a portrait of Pres. Garfield, is about ready to be issued.

In the matter of campaign assessments, Attorney General Brewster has rendered an opinion that a member of congress is not an officer of the United States, and that a gift to him for campaign purposes does not come within the terms of the statute.

President Arthur has appointed Judge Hale, of Iowa to be governor of Wyoming; J. Schuyler Crosby, of New York, for governor of Montana, and W. W. Hoover, of California, to be associate justice of the supreme court of Arizona.

Numerous interesting stories have been circulated in various watering-places about the movements of the president this summer.—His private secretary says that President Arthur has not as yet made a single plan for the summer. Thus far he has been very comfortable in Washington, and has no desire to go away. It is more than probable that he will spend the month of August at the Soldiers' home, and after that he will make a trip to New York and some of the places within its vicinity, but that is all uncertain. The Soldiers' home part of it is the only change that the president has yet considered.

The work of collecting and publishing monthly the freight rates of transportation companies, authorized by the last law making appropriations to pay the agricultural department, has just begun. Returns are coming in promptly. It is deemed best to publish those already received of two of the through routes from the west to the seaboard, the prominent southern line, the Central and Union Pacific Continental line, and several of the Atlantic seaboard steamship lines. The next publication will be for all the through lines, with information concerning connections and loca. feeders.

The judge advocate general has submitted to the secretary of war his report on the petition for the release of Sergt. Mason on the ground that he is illegally confined. General Swaim merely reviews from the military law standpoint the legal points raised in the petition, and makes no recommendation. He adheres strictly to the views expressed in his original report on the case, that the proceedings of the court-martial were irregular and illegal. The case will not be reported to the president until after the return of Secretary Lincoln.

The pension appropriation bill, as passed by the senate, makes no change in the amount appropriated by the house, which remains at $100,000,000. No amendments, except those recommended by the senate committee on appropriations, were adopted, outside of the mere verbal changes. The amendments authorize the commissioner of pensions to appoint surgeons to make such examination of pensioners and applicants as he shall require, and to organize boards of surgeons, to consist of three members each, at such points in each state as he shall deem necessary to conduct such examinations, subject to the revision of a special board of three surgeons, to be appointed when the exigencies of the service require it. The fee for such examinations shall be $2 for each member of the board. An amendment was also adopted prohibiting the payment of double pensions.

A bill has recently been reported from the senate committee on printing, providing for printing the reports of the tenth census and appropriating $835,461 for the work. The committee recommend the printing of the usual number of complete series of separate reports with ten thousand additional copies; twenty thousand additional copies of the reports on population and agriculture; ten thousand of the report on manufactures and mechanics, and the usual number and 100,000 additional copies of the compendium, which it is thought will be of the most practical value for popular reference. In the report accompanying the bill the committee speak of the tenth census as "the most extensive and complete that has been taken; more comprehensive in its scope, more minute in its details." They say "its reports constitute a wonderful exhibition of the population, resources, accumulated wealth, and varied industries of the country," and in explanation of the action taken with regard to the printing and distribution assert that the results of the work can be made available by general distribution among public libraries and to a considerable extent among individuals.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JULY 17.—In the senate, Mr. Allison reported the disagreement of the conference committee on the legislative appropriation, and a new committee was appointed. Consideration of the internal revenue bill was then resumed. Mr. Beck urged his amendment to reduce the tax on manufactured tobacco to ten cents per pound. Mr. Sherman sounded a note of warning in regard to the heavy appropriations, when the subject went over. Concurrence was given to the house amendment to the senate bill to promote telegraphic communication between Europe and America. An executive session closed the proceedings.

JULY 18.—In the senate, the petition of the Guiteau jurors for $5 per day was refused. By a vote of 39 to 20, an executive session was then held, during which a long debate occurred over the confirmation of James E. Slaughter for postmaster at Mobile, the nomination being approved. When the doors were opened, Mr. Sherman called up the tax bill, a motion to adjourn being defeated. Messrs. Logan, Cameron, Dawes, Conger, and Jones presented telegraphic protests from tobacco manufacturers against a change in the rate of taxation, and asking for rebates if the bill passed. No action was taken.

JULY 19.—In the senate, Mr. Sewell presented resolutions adopted by the Fifth army corps at Detroit, asking that justice be done Fitz John Porter. Mr. Logan introduced a bill to so modify the Chinese law as to permit them to pass through the country without stopping. It was laid aside without action, and the tax bill was taken up. Mr. Williams denounced the measure as a temporary expedient by the republican party to quiet popular clamor. Mr. Beck's amendment to fix the tobacco tax at 12 cents per pound after January next was agreed to. A motion to retain the stamp tax on bank checks and drafts for over $100 was rejected. The house joint resolution to extend the appropriations to July 31 was passed.

JULY 20.—In the senate, Mr. Cockrell called up the bill to relieve certain soldiers from the charge of desertion, which was discussed for some time. After a rambling debate on the order of business, the tax bill was taken up. Mr. Voorhees denounced the measure as favoring a privileged class. Mr. Harrison claimed that his colleague was not in harmony with other leading democrats. Mr. Jonas submitted figures to show that the sugar interest could not stand reduction in price. Amendments to strike out the provision repealing bank taxation was rejected. It was agreed to fix the tax on tobacco at 12 cents per pound. Mr. Dawes reported an amendment to the sundry civil bill appropriating $350,000 for additional purchases of beef for the Indians, to be distributed by the secretary of the interior.

JULY 21.—The senate passed the house bill to fix the time for holding federal courts in the Northern district of Ohio. Mr. McMillan submitted a conference report on the river and harbor bill, announcing a disagreement on the items for the Potomac flats, the Hennepin and Chesapeake canals, and the Mississippi river. Mr. Logan criticised the report as endangering projects which were of more value than the whole bill. Mr. Ingalls charged that the senate conferees had taken special care of all amendments for the benefit of their own states, which Mr. McMillan denied. The report was adopted, and the conference committee was reappointed. The house revenue bill was then taken up. An amendment by Mr. Bayard to retain the tax on matches was rejected—8 to 43. A bill to authorize S. L. M. Barlow and others to lay a cable to Europe was referred. The senate adjourned to Saturday.

JULY 22.—The senate passed house bills to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth by using unoccupied military barracks; to pay Mrs. Garfield $50,000, less any advances made on the salary of the late president, and for the erection of a public building at Marquette. Mr. Cockrell secured the adoption of resolutions asking information as to the expenditure in each state during the past three years for public buildings, [illegible] passed that the secretary of the interior report his reason for ordering a double pension for General Ward B. Burnett. The revenue bill was taken up. Amendments to retain the stamp taxes on perfumery and playing-cards were voted down. The first section was passed. An amendment to the second section was adopted fixing the annual tax on dealers in leaf tobacco at $12, exempting farmers or lumbermen who furnish supplies to their employes. Mr. Mahone moved to make the tax on snuff and manufactured tobacco 8 cents per pound. After a protracted debate the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

JULY 17.—In the house, the bill to provide additional industrial training schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks was passed. Mr. Hewitt rose to a question of privilege, and called attention to a sentence appearing in the Record as a speech by Mr. Robeson which had not been uttered on the floor, and asked the speaker to have the objectionable phrase stricken out. Mr. Robeson retaliated by words of ridicule, and the speaker declined to order the expunging of the words. The house refused to fix a date for the consideration of the bill for the admission of Dakota. A senate bill was passed for the sale of the site of the old postoffice building in New York for $600,000. Mr. Robinson introduced resolutions in the interest of American citizens in British prisons, and calling on the secretary of the navy to report whether or not American sailors are performing police duty in Alexandria under the British admiral. Mr. Bingham reported a bill in regard to the pay of letter-carriers.

JULY 18.—The house arranged for the expenses of the government by extending the provisions of the joint resolution of June 30. The committee on elections made reports on the Virginia and Maine contested seats, pronouncing in favor of Cabell and Reed, and the resolutions were adopted. Mr. Calkins called up the South Carolina case of Smalls vs. Tillman, on which Mr. Randall raised a question of consideration. The house proceeded to vote, all but two democrats declining to answer, the result showing fifteen less than a quorum. The doors were closed, and several roll-calls took place, a quorum being obtained at 5 p. m. Mr. Waite opened the discussion in behalf of Smalls, when an adjournment was taken.

JULY 19.—The house resumed consideration of the South Carolina contested election case of Smalls vs. Tillman. Mr. Horr stood in front of the speaker's desk and with a small cane pointed out the boundaries of the new congressional districts of South Carolina, and denounced the work as downright villainy.—Messrs. Moulton and Simonton argued in support of the contestee, and Messrs. Ketcham and Springer in support of the contestant, the former arraigning the republicans for corruption and gerrymandering, objected to their lecturing the people of South Carolina on political morality. Mr. Tillman, speaking in his own behalf, expressed the fear that his state would be reconstructed for the purpose of plunder, and announced that he would be returned to congress by negro votes. Mr. Smalls was then seated by 141 to 5. The Alabama case of Smith vs. Shelley was taken up, Mr. Ranney obtaining the floor.

JULY 20.—The house, after arguments on the Alabama contested election case by Messrs. Ranney and Calkins, declared vacant the seat for the Fourth district, Mr. Smith having died recently. Mr. Reed called up a resolution to amend the rules, to which Mr. Blackburn objected. A vote in which the democrats remained silent, showed the house to be devoid of a quorum.

JULY 21.—In the house, Mr. Robinson rose to a question of privilege, and resented a recent remark about his deafness by Mr. Robeson. Mr. Page submitted a disagreeing conference report on the river and harbor bill, and a new committee was appointed. Mr. Hiscock presented a conference report on the general deficiency appropriation bill, on which an agreement has been reached on all clauses except that relative to the mileage of senators, and the house decided not to recede from its disagreement on that issue. A bill to modify the money-order system was passed, in which provision is made for the issue of postal notes for less than $5. Another measure was passed to fix the salaries of railway postal clerks, dividing them into five classes. The senate bill to authorize the postmaster general to extend post routes twenty-five miles beyond terminal points, amended to permit the employment of necessary temporary aid at the expense of a derelict contractor, was passed. A bill to fix the compensation of fourth-class postmasters inside of $1,000 per annum, exclusive of money-order commissions, was passed.

JULY 22.—The house passed Mr. Deuster's bill to regulate the carrying of passengers by steamships, the measure having been revamped to suit the views of the president. Mr. Kasson precipitated a tariff debate by calling up the bill to allow a drawback on foreign materials and in the construction of vessels for foreign account, and the bill went over to Monday. Postal bills were passed to make the rate on second-class publications delivered by carriers two cents per pound; to fine or imprison anyone personating a postoffice inspector; to punish postmasters for making false certificates of the arrival or departure of mails, and to provide that no bidder for mail service shall be required to furnish a check or draft. Mr. Flower sought to introduce a constitutional amendment by which the president can approve or object to any item of an appropriation bill. Indian bills were passed to open to settlement the lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Utes; authorizing the Cherokees to lease three salt mines in their domain, and increasing the salary of the commissioner of Indian affairs to $5,000.

A Grand Rapids grocer named Denkema, who was much exposed to small pox, refused to take any precautions and put his trust in God. It availed not, and he caught the disease. Then he shut himself up in a room and continued to trust in God. His trust was sublime to stubborness, and he died without the benefit of a physician's services.

ESTATE OF CLARA OSTERHOUT.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court, for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, in said county, on the twenty-fifth day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present Norman Geddes, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Clara Osterhout, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, of Lester Osgood, administrator of the estate of said deceased, alleging that he has paid the debts of deceased, and the expenses of administration of said estate thus far incurred, and is ready to file his final account, and praying that the same be allowed, and that the residue of assets be assigned to the persons entitled thereto, and for his discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 21st day of August next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee for three successive weeks, previous to said day of hearing.

NORMAN GEDDES, Judge of Probate.

CLINTON.

D. H. Silvers is again a resident of Clinton.

D. Woodward has about decided to move his foundry and agricultural works to Manchester. It is a bad blow to Clinton.

N. B. Banks, D. D. S., has opened up dental rooms in the Chandler bl'k.

No tidings from the fugitive Bassett.

Even in the midst of persecution the hotel under the hospitable management of Vet Erskine, continues to thrive.

Mr. John Gregory is pronounced one of the most obliging liverymen we have ever had. Success attend him.

It has become quite popular of late to take your 'girl' and spend a day boating, &c. on Sand lake. Even the clergy have caught the mania.

The picnic social Tuesday evening at "Lakeview cottage," for the benefit of St. John's Episcopal church of this place, was not as largely attended as it would have been had it not rained all the afternoon and part of the evening.

SPRINGVILLE.

The Sons of Temperance meeting of the District Division which was held at this place was well represented by nearly every lodge in the division and a good sociable time was enjoyed by all. The meeting lasted two days, ending with a grand picnic at Sand lake on Friday, July 28th. The program was as follows:

Music by the Springville Cornet Band.
Recitation—Miss McCourtie, of Summerset Center.
Essay—Miss Brown, of Church Corners.
Music by the band.
Essay—S. E. Kirkby, Springville.
Music by the band.

On Saturday last we were again reminded how uncertain life is by the news that Mrs. Pechtel, an old and very much respected lady, dropped dead from her chair while conversing with a neighbor. Funeral services were held on Sabbath in the Episcopal church at the Junction, and but about two-thirds of the congregation could be seated.

W. H. Smith has his agricultural shop open again.

BRITTON.

We propose to call ourselves Britton instead of East Ridgeway.

Sam'l Kniffin has been to Saginaw for a new supply of lumber.

C. L. Waring took charge of the telegraph office Wednesday afternoon while W. J. Clark attended the funeral of his cousin.

Mrs. Jackson is having a new house put up.

Dr. Nelson has obtained the use of the local telegraph line for one year.—His patrons can summon him free of charge. A good arrangement.

Mrs. Vreeland, from St. Johns, is visiting friends in this locality.

Geo. W. Smith started for Petoskey last Tuesday where he will remain for a few weeks in case his health improves.

Strange freaks seem to possess one of our residents which proves him either crazy or willfully malicious.—The last thing done was to go into a neighbor's corn field and break and stamp down nice thrifty corn. It looks like pure cussedness.

RIDGEWAY.

Ice cream social at G. W. Jackson's Friday evening.

The emancipation excursion Tuesday was not patronized very largely from here. The gentleman of color who tumbled out of the swing may have been one of our crowd.

The death of Mrs. Alfred Richards, which has been expected for the past ten days, occurred Tuesday morning. She leaves a husband and three children and and a large circle of relatives who keenly feel the bereavement. The funeral was held at the house of G. W. Clark on Wednesday and was largely attended.

Ridgeway M. E. Church.

Few churches, in rural districts, have shown during their existence a more substantial and healthy basis than the M. E. church at Ridgeway. Unimportant as a business center, but the moral status and excellent qualities of her inhabitants, its healthy atmosphere, educational facilities, and financial ability speak in no uncertain terms, and are all alike meritorious. The church edifice is a handsome structure, comfortably furnished and built of substantial material. The grounds are well supplied with long tiers of commodious sheds, which are a great convenience in time of storm and the piercing rays of a summer's sun. The pastor's studio is in the basement of the edifice, as also church parlors and lecture rooms. The interior of the building throughout, above and below, is well ventilated and presents an imposing appearance. Its present pastor, the Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick, is a gentleman of clerical experience, an able expounder of the gospel, affable, courteous, and kind, and is highly respected by his people. The membership comprises the wealth, influence and ability of the community, and are respected for their example, stability and liberality. The church choir is an honor to the audience, an honor to its leader, and an honor to itself. It comprises rare musical talent, and well meriting commendations. Children's Day, as celebrated by this church, made a deep and favorable impression. The floral distributions, and various other suitable embellishments together with the highly entertaining exercises clearly evidenced the fact that when this people undertake a laudable enterprise they push it to completion. The grand organ concert held on the evening of the 25th ult was only a repetition of previous exercises. At an early hour the agent began to receive tickets at the door, and tramp, tramp, down the broad isles they came until at 8 o'clock the church was comfortably filled with attentive spectators.—The floral cross in front of the altar presented wonderful skill and beauty as well as the highly cultured tastes of the artists. The organ contains two hundred and forty pipes, manufactured by Granville Wood & Sons, of Detroit, who aided much in vocal and instrumental music on the occasion. The costly instrument presents an imposing appearance, and furnishes any grade of melody, which for its richness and tone cannot be excelled in other places by more costly instruments.

The exercises were various, and the diversity made the occasion all the more spicy and entertaining. Several of the pieces were amusing as well as instructive, and each performer gave evidence that they were masters of the parts they personally bore. Organs, as well as money, are of great antiquity and the intelligent portion of society have long since learned that the organ is a grand auxiliary in divine worship. The psalmist thought so when he penned the hundred and fiftieth psalm, which reads as follows: "Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power. Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness. Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: praise him with the psaltry and harp. Praise him with the timbrel and dance; praise him with stringed instruments and organs. Praise him upon the high sounding cymbols. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

This church and its friends have done nobly and we are more and more convinced that when the people of Ridgeway undertake a worthy enterprise, they not only push it to the end but perform the work with satisfactory results. Miss Ella Hall, the organist, is a lady of rare musical talents and will supply the attendants upon divine worship at this place with tones of charm and melody.

The Height of Folly.

To wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, is the height of folly, when you might be easily cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known sickly families made the healthiest, by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

Morenci Observer: It seems there is a society of Quakers or Friends, in Seneca, small though it may be. The members of this little Zion is composed mainly of the household of Joseph Smith, in the northern part of the township, where the meetings are held twice a year—in January and July. The July meeting took place the present week and was attended by a somewhat numerous Quaker family of Borton, of Franklin, O., who passed through the village, on their homeward journey, on Wednesday afternoon. The little society is of the Hicksite branch of the Quaker faith.

WHITENACK, BORDINE & Co., will furnish three gasoline stoves to do the cooking for Co. G. You may be sure that they will do the work.

A HUDSON ROMANCE.

Recovery of a Girl Stolen From Her Parents 15 Years Ago.

The final, happy restoration of a girl to her father and mother, after a sad separation of fifteen long years, is a sensation and a romance which Hudson furnishes us, and its recital is very interesting. Miss Lillie Bowers, is now a young lady about 18 years of age, quite large in stature, intelligent and attractive in appearance, and certainly has a romantic history connected with her life.

Nearly fifteen years ago, when she was but little over 2 years of age, she was stolen from her parents, who were then living at Sandusky, and from that time until a month ago she has never been seen by any of her relatives. Immediately after her disappearance, a thorough search was instituted for her recovery by her parents. It was learned that about the time the little girl was stolen there was a body of people camping out in that vicinity who lived like gypsies, yet differed from them in that they were darker complex[illegible] and used the German langu[illegible] conversation. From all tha[illegible] found out, it was believed [illegible] had abducted the child. Years rolled on without bringing any news of the lost one. The fond parents were nearly crazed with grief, but never gave up all hopes of some time finding their child. On the 9th of last July a lady living near Genoa, a small town a few miles east of Toledo, who had formerly lived at Sandusky and knew the circumstances connected with the abduction, wrote Mrs. Bowers, who had also moved from Sandusky to Hudson, that she believed she had a clew to their missing daughter, and that she was living with a well-to-do-family in that neighborhood. A brisk correspondence followed for several days.—Finally being convinced that there was more in the clew than any that had ever been found heretofore, Mrs. Bowers went to Genoa a few days ago to make personal inquiries regarding the matter. She learned that about fourteen years ago the local authorities at Genoa had discovered a child in the possession of a band of roving people, and feeling satisfied it was not their own took it from them. It was then bound out to James Calkins, a farmer living near Genoa, who bears the reputation of being a most honorable and upright man. In his family she has remained ever since, always receiving the best of care and attention. The mother was not long in forming the conclusion that her long lost child and the young lady in Mr. Calkins' family were one and the same person. A meeting settled all doubts that might have been in her mind, and the joy of the mother can better be imagined than expressed. The daughter, too, was overjoyed at meeting her mother, for she had known that she was not Mr. Calkins' child, and had often longed to see her parents. Upon the girl expressing a desire to return home with her mother, Mr. Calkins promptly gave his consent to the action, and offered to receive her whenever she desired to return.

DOCTORS IN CONVENTION.

The Southern Michigan Medical association held its annual meeting at Hillsdale last week. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President—Dr. H. Peters, Tecumseh.
Vice—W. Byrns, of Bronson.
Sec.—E. Eaton, Clayton.
Treas.—M. R. Morden, Adrian.

Resolutions on the death of Dr. P. J. Spaulding, of Adrian, and Dr. S. S. Cutter, of Coldwater, were presented and ordered to be published with the proceedings.

Committees for the ensuing year were appointed as follows:

Public Health and Hygiene—R. A. Everett; Epidemics and Endemics—D. Todd; Obsterics—M. R. Morden; Gynaecology—H. D. Wood; Practice of Medicine—S. H. Clisbe; Materia Medica—W. S. Mosher; Surgery—A. F. Whelan; Ophthalmology—A. R. Smart; Chemistry—A. Stephenson; Ethics and Grievances—W. B. Town; Medical Jurisprudence—W. Byrns; Microscopy—Bion Whelan; Diseases of Children—D. H. Wood.

Adrian will be the next place of meeting of the association.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

Blissfield wants a base ball tournament.

Floyd Bostwick took in the Deerfield tournament last week.

Deerfield rejoices. They have a new fence built around the pound.

The old 18th regiment will hold its reunion this year at Ogden Centre, on Friday, Aug. 25th.

The Detroit league ball club will play an exhibition game in Hudson on the 8th of September.

The pastors of the several Hudson churches will hold out-door meetings on the public square every Saturday afternoon at three o'clock.

Blissfield Advance: Mr. F. H. Brown has put into his store a new contrivance called "cash carrying system." By its means ca[illegible] can be sent to the cash desk in a moment and the change returned. Call and see it.

The base ball tournament at Deerfield last week was a success. Five games were played, and the prizes were awarded as follows: Palmyra took first money, $40; Monroe second, $25; and the Hungry Nine of Deerfield, third, $15.

Adrian Press: Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Hough, this week occupied their elegant new residence which has just been completed. It is a handsome structure, and a beautiful home for them in which to pass their declining years. May they long enjoy it.

Adrian Press: The editor of the Record was overcome by the heat, or imbibed too much corn juice Wednesday last, for he sat right down and wrote 'next month has five Sundays.' Some heartless wretch imposed upon Philander by giving him an almanac for 1880.

Hudson Gazette: A big time ahead in the base ball world. The Hudson "Chaffs" have challenged the Detroit League Club to play on the Hudson Driving Park, Sept. 8th—in fact the match is as good as arranged. This will be the best thing of the season in the local sporting line. Full particulars in due time.

Morenci Observer: Fooling with a gun has again had its usual fatal cost. On Saturday a man named Wm. Nickloy, of Pittsford township, Hillsdale county, went to the county seat leaving his two small boys in charge of the house, and during his absence the family gun was brought out for parade. It was loaded; one of them attempted to shoot it off, but the weapon "hung fire." Then, as the other, while his brother held it over his left arm to examine the tube, was about to look down the barrel, the gun discharged its load, blowing off the top of the boy's head.

A republican county convention, for the county of Lenawee, for the purpose of choosing twenty four delegates to the republican state convention, to be held at Kalamazoo, on Aug. 30th, 1882; and to choose twenty-four delegates to the republican congressional convention of the Second congressional district, hereafter to be called; and for the purpose of electing a county committee, for the ensuing two years, and the transaction of such other necessary business as may properly be considered, will be held at Dean's opera house, in the city of Adrian, on Monday, August 21, 1882, at 11 o'cl'k a. m.

The Miners' Protege.

BY ULLIK H. AKERSTROM.

"Wall, you see, it's a queer story, Missy;
The little gal's none of our kin;
But, you bet, when the old man got under,
She's the one who will handle our tin.
My pard an' me's rough-mixin' fellers,
We've got nary children nor wife,
But we love little yeller-haired Nellie,
And we'll rear her up right—bet your life.

"How old? Wall, she's high eight, I reckon:
Five years since we brought her out here;
An' she was the cunninest baby
We'd looked at for many a year.
You see, 'twas the time the Apaches
Broke out. Hist the red imps of sin!
The emigrant train crossed their trail, Miss
An' the Injuns they scooped 'em all in.

"Yes, thar lay men, children an' women;
The red devils raised all their h'ar.
We couldn't do nothin' to help 'em,
So my pard an' me buried 'em thar.
We found one likely-lookin' young creature
Lyin' out from the rest of the heap,
She was dead, like the others, an' Nellie
Lay close by her side—fast asleep.

"Wall, 'twas night mighty nigh to the settlement—
Bill an' me turned the thing in our mind—
An' at last we concluded to keep her,
An' bring her up lovin' an' kind.
We buried her poor dad an' mammy,
Likewise all her unlucky mates,
An' we named her Nell, arter a sweetheart,
My pard had once back in the States.

"But the trouble we had with that young un
Was somethin' quite funny to see,
Bill give her up for a mystery—
Likewise she was too much for me.
Her darned duds we couldn't get on right,
An' we cussed every button an' string;
But arter a spell we did better,
When you once got the hang of the thing.

"An' she's growed up quite pertlike an' bloomin';
We take her to work every day;
While Bill an' me's busy a-minin'
She'll sit by the rock-pile an' play.
An' she's made better men of us both, Miss;
We don't cuss now, nor go on no spree,
'Cause we're workin' and savin' for Nellie,
The pride of my old pard an' me."

MISS LYDDY'S WEDDING GOWN.

BY CAROLINE F. CORBIN.

"Oh, missus, missus! Somefin's done happened!"

Blank horror and dismay were depicted upon the face of my small African, as she stood upon my threshold with upraised hands and eyeballs that seemed starting from their sockets. Her pause was one of preparation, for with the innate consideration of her race she sought to break the news gently to me, but the burden of it was too great for her, and with the next breath she exclaimed:

"Dem pigs done chawed up Miss Lyddy's weddin' gown!"

"Glory," I exclaimed (she had been piously christened Gloriana), "Glory, how did it happen?"

"Dunno!" said Glory. "'Pears to me dem pigs has got Satan in 'em. Guess dey's 'scended from de ole lot what run down a steep place into de sea. I'll go an' fetch ye a piece."

She sped out and instantly returned with a tattered shred of India mull that had once been white, and still bore some resemblance to a gown. Poor Miss Lyddy! This was all that remained of her dream of wedding splendors. It was too pitiful! I felt at once that the bonds of good neighborhood had been irretrievably broken, and that Major Hawthorne must be made aware of this last and worst depredation of his unseemly pigs.

But who would break the news to Miss Lyddy?

"Glory," said I, "where is she?"

"Gone over to de buryin'-place to 'tend to de ancesters," answered Glory.

Poor, faithful soul, even in those last terrors of matrimony and the still more appalling responsibilities of unsaved heathen souls hanging over her, she did not forget the ancestors. Long lines of Ludkinses lay buried in little sunken hillocks in the family burying-place, which lay just in sight of her sitting-room window. She herself was the last of her race, and until within three weeks it had seemed that the only fate which awaited her was to live out her little space under the ancestral roof-tree and then take her place in the silent ranks of those who had gone before. But a change had come. It came in the person of a returned missionary from the Micronesian Islands, who had buried the first and second partners of his joys and sorrows somewhere under the palm trees of those tropical lands, and had come back to the scenes of his youth to recruit his health, serve the cause and look up partner number three. He met Miss Lyddy at a woman's missionary meeting. He called the next afternoon and was invited to stay to tea. He accepted the invitation, and the next morning Miss Lyddy came into my room—for I, too, domiciled under the Ludkins roof-tree, for a consideration—and with much hesitation and many faint and delicate blushes informed me that she had promised to share the future lot of the Rev. Nehemiah Applebloom, to take care of his six children and sustain and support him in his arduous labors among the heathen of the Micronesian Islands.

I was struck dumb with amazement. "Miss Lydia," I said at length, "have you duly considered this project?"

Her thin figure quivered and her white face, that had yet a delicate remembrance of youth in it, grew tender with feeling.

"Yes," she said, "I think I have. I have always had a presentiment that I should marry a minister or a missionary." Admirable and pathetic faith! "And Mr. Applebloom says he knew the moment he set eyes upon me that I was ordained to be his wife; so you see it is not the surprise to either of us that it is likely to be to our friends.

I knew then that her mind was fully made up, so I demurred no longer, but lent myself at once to a discussion of the wedding, which I plainly saw was what Miss Lyddy desired of me.

"You will be married in church, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Lyddy, with gentle decision. "I am the last of the Ludkinses. All the Ludkinses have been married at home. I will go out from under my own roof-tree. If I must seem to forsake the ancestors"—she paused to regulate a little choking in her throat—"I will at least not forsake their traditions. I shall leave a little money with the parish clerk, that he may see that the graves of my dead are kept in proper order, as I always have loved to keep them, and I hope they will forgive my departure; but I will at least go as a Ludkins should. It is my desire to be married in my grandmother's wedding-gown."

Miss Lyddy's voice trembled, and there was a humidity in her eyes, at which I did not wonder, for it was much like a funeral, after all.

"I thought, perhaps," went on Miss Lyddy, "if I brought the venerated relic to you, you would tell me if anything were necessary to be done to fit it to me. I don't care for the fashions, you know, and my grandmother, as I remember her, was about my height, but still, you know—something—some changes might be advisable."

"Certainly," I said, "do bring it to me. I should so like to see it."

"It is sprigged India (she called it Ingy) mull. My grandfather, Captain Simon Ludkins, brought it home from over the seas. I'll bring it."

Like some pale and gentle ghost she rose then and went to a bureau drawer and unrolled from folds of linen that smelt of lavender, the fair, frail relic of Mrs. Captain Simon Ludkins' wedding state. It was a fine embroidered mull, the undoubted product of Indian looms.

"It is lovely," I said, "and so well kept that it will be just the thing for you. Will you try it on? We can tell then just what it needs."

Miss Lyddy proceeded to disrobe herself and put on the spider-net gown. As she did so, the changes in fashion's mandates became only too evident. It had no waist to speak of, and just a little lace-trimmed puff for sleeves. Miss Lyddy was evidently surprised. She had not thought of this. I knew well what the troubled look upon her face meant, and I pitied her maiden sensibilities. Could it be possible that her grandmother, Mrs. Captain Simon Ludkins had ever worn such a gown as this? She said not a word that could indicate the depth of her mortification, but her face was a study for an artist.

"There must be sleeves," she murmured, after a few moments of silent and unembarrassed contemplation.

"Yes," I replied, cheerfully as my constrained gravity would allow. "And you might have a fichu and a flounce on the bottom."

She looked down. She had not before realized that the skirt of the venerated relic lacked a full quarter of a yard of touching the floor.

"However could they!" she ejaculated in an undertone. But she quickly recovered herself and looked up to me cheerfully over her spectacles.

"How ingenious you are!" she said, with an air of sweet relief. "I knew you would help me out."

We went out together and bought the requisite mull that day, but when we came to put it beside the "venerated relic" of Mrs. Captain Ludkins it was evident that time had so enriched the color of the latter that the two were most unfortunately unlike.

"We can lay it out on the grass," I said; "these June dews are just the thing for it, and as it will be evening nobody will in the least notice."

Again Miss Lyddy smiled gratefully, and declared that my suggestion should be carried out in the most faithful manner.

The Rev. Nehemiah Applebloom—"A lovely name, don't you think so?" said Lyddy, and she blushed and smiled like a school-girl in her teens—had but a short furlough, and the marriage was to transpire the next week, so the relic was put out to bleach forthwith. It had already been on the grass three days and nights and had been religiously watered by Miss Lyddy at morn and [illegible] was to be taken up early and put into the dressmaker's hands for the necessary alterations, when the dreadful event occurred with which this narrative opens.

"Glory," I said, "do you keep watch for Miss Lyddy when she returns. Say nothing about what has happened unless she misses the gown from the grass. In that case tell her that I thought it was bleached enough and took it up to dry, and you don't know where I have put it. I am going out now, but if she asks where, tell her you don't know."

Glory was faithful, and had besides the natural craft of her race, and I knew that she could be trusted. As for me, I swiftly donned my bonnet and set out to find Major Hawthorne. It was a bright June evening, and my walk through the meadow and the grove that skirted Hawthorndeau would have been a delightful one if I had borne a mind more at ease. The Major was a gentleman by birth, but he had lived out his fifty bachelor years in a gay and careless way that had seemed to set the gentler part of creation at defiance. In the lifetime of his parents Hawthorndeau had been a beautiful estate. It still retained many small marks of wealthy and cultivated ownership, but it was sadly run down, as the home of a bachelor is apt to be. The grove, which had once been the pride of the place, was grown up to brush now, and the sere leaves of many summers' growth rustled under my feet as I walked through it. At one point, coming suddenly around a thick clump of undergrowth, I heard a chorus of tiny snorts, and the scampering of numberless hoofs, and knew that I had invaded a haunt of the Major's last agricultural freak, the very brood of Berkshire pigs that were the source of all my borrowed woes. Away they scampered, their snouts well raised in the air, and each with a curl in its tail that seemed too ornamental to be wholly the product of nature and to justify the village rumor that the Major's man put those tails in curl-papers every night. They had the air of spoiled children, every one, and were evidently the Major's pets. But that didn't matter; they had ruined Miss Lyddy's wedding gown, to say nothing of a dozen other aggravating exploits which do not belong to this story, and I was determined to have satisfaction out of their owner.

I found the Major sitting on his piazza with an after-dinner look upon his handsome, good-humored face. He rose to greet me with an air of old-school politeness, dashed with a faint wonder that I, a woman, should have had the hardihood to approach a place so little frequented by women.

"Good evening, Miss Grace. I am happy to see you. In what can I have the honor to serve you?"

He had read my face and knew that I had come on a mission.

"Major Hawthorne," I said, paying no attention to his offer of a chair, "I have come on a very painful errand."

"Sit down, madam," said the Major politely. "I cannot possibly permit a lady to stand on my piazza. I ought, perhaps, ask you to walk in, but it is rather stuffy indoors this evening."

"No," I said, "I will sit here, if you please." To tell the truth, indoors as seen through the window, had not the most inviting look, and I was glad to compromise.

"You have, no doubt, heard"—plunging in medias res—"that Miss Lydia Ludkins is about to be married?"

"Married! Miss Lydia! No! Hadn't heard a word of it," said the Major in genuine amazement. "Who is the fortunate man, pray?"

"The Rev. Nehemiah Applebloom, a missionary to the Micronesian Islands, who has come home to recruit his health and find a wife."

"I know him," said the Major. "Saw him down at the station—a long, lean, lank individual—just fit for his vocation; no temptation whatever to cannibals! But what the deuce is he going to do with Miss Lydia? What will Balaam's Corners do without her?"

"Balaam's Corners must do the best it can," I said—I fear a little sharply—for my mind was still in a most aggressive state toward the Major.

"They are to be married next week, and"—

"What will become of the ancestor's?" interpolated the Major, in whom surprise seemed to have gotten the better of habitual politeness.

"Oh, she has made arrangements with Mr. Crow about that."

"Just like her! Dear, faithful girl."

The Major had all his life loved all the sex—not one—and I was not to be beguiled by this show of feeling.

"She had set her heart upon being married in her grandmother's wedding-gown."

"Old Mrs. Captain Simon? I remember her well. A mighty fine woman. She would never have gone to the ends of the earth with a missionary. It's the craziest scheme I ever heard of."

I began to fear that I should never get to my errand.

"It was put out on the grass to bleach, being a little yellow with age. It was a lovely embroidered India muslin that the old Captain brought home from India himself."

"How well I remember him in my boyhood! A jolly soul! A grand-daughter of his going off to the Cannibal Islands to be eaten up by savages! I won't have it!"

"Her heart is set upon going," I continued. "The wedding-gown was put out to bleach, and this very afternoon those little Berkshire pigs of yours—they are a nuisance to the whole neighborhood, Major—trampled and rooted it to pieces, so that it is utterly ruined."

"Little black rascals!" said the Major, with a chuckle behind his neckcloth.

"And I have come, without her knowledge, to tell you of it, because I was sure that, under the circumstances, a gentleman of your breeding would feel in honor bound to make some reparation to Miss Lydia."

The Major mused and looked at his boot for a moment in silence.

"Miss Grace," he said at length, "I thank you for the service you have rendered me in this matter. Will you have the goodness to say to Miss Ludkins, with my compliments, that I shall do myself the honor to wait upon her tomorrow morning at ten o'clock, to adjust the unfortunate matter? I beg in the little solicitude as possible, for though I cannot restore the ancient and venerated dry goods, I will do the best that is possible under the circumstances to make the loss good."

He bowed over my hand and the audience was evidently concluded. Was I satisfied? No, indeed! What woman would not have felt wronged to be left at the end of a mission of disinterested benevolence in such a state of doubt and uncertainty as this? But was obliged to go home nevertheless, and wait as patiently as I could for the stroke of ten next morning.

Glory had been in hearing when the message had been delivered to Miss Lyddy and she too was on the watch. At last she scudded in from the hedge, her ivories all a-glisten, and her eyes wide open and full of a rather incomprehensible mirth.

"He's a-comin'" she said; "and such a sight!"

At that minute the gate clicked and up the walk strode indeed a most astonishing figure. The Major had gotten himself up in a continental suit, which he must have fished out of the unknown depths of the ancient attics at Hawthorndeau; black velvet coat with lace ruffles at the wrist, knee breeches, white satin waistcoat, slippers with shoe buckles, powdered wig and cocked hat. He was six feet tall, portly and well formed, and he looked every inch a Signer of the Declaration at the very least. He was followed by his colored man, who carried a large brown paper parcel.

"He's come a-courtin', missus," said Glory, "ye can see it in his face.

I had not the instinct of Glory, and doubted; but what his errand was I was dying to know.

But he disappeared into Miss Lydia's parlor, and I was left outside to temper my impatience as best I could. Presently Glory entered on tip-toe.

"Missus, missus," she whispered. "De do's swung open jess de leas' crack, an' its jess opposite de big murror, an' if ye come out here in de hall, ye can see it all in de murror as plain as day, an' it's a heep better'n a play."

It was a temptation, but believe me, dear reader, I resisted it. Only as Glory ran back to her peeping, I followed to pull her away and send her out of doors—that was simply my duty—and there he was full on his knees before her, and she with that rapt seraphic look upon her face which no woman ever wears except on the most vitally interesting occasions. But Glory disposed of, I went back to my sewing and waited as best I could the conclusion of the momentous interview. The Major came out at length, as smiling as a May morning, leaving the brown paper parcel behind him.

It was very still in Miss Lydia's room for a quarter of an hour, and then she, too, emerged from her retreat. Spread over her hands was a gown of cream-colored brocade embellished with the loveliest roses in full bloom, with blue forget-me-nots trailing here and there among them. It had an ample waist, elbow sleeves, and a train a yard and a half long.

"My dear Grace," she said, "the Major has brought me his mother's wedding gown to be married in.

"It is beautiful," I said; "but who is to be the bridegroom?"

"The major himself! Didn't he look grand in his knee breeches?"

"And Mr. Applebloom?"

"Major Hawthorne will adjust that matter."

"That matter," indeed! She spoke as though it were already as remote from her as the pyramids.

"I congratulate you, Miss Lydia," I said, growing formal, for she had behaved shamefully.

"Don't blame me," she murmured.—"Major Hawthorne declares that he has loved me since I was a child, but never thought himself worthy of me (the gay deceiver!); and Mr. Applebloom, you know, is only the acquaintance of a day."

I wanted to ask her how she had disposed of her presentiment, but I did not dare.

Major Hawthorne subscribed fifty dollars to the Micronesian Mission and sent Mr. Applebloom elsewhere to look for a wife, and the verdict of Balaam's Corners was that he had done the handsome thing.

"For goodness!" said Glory, "ef dere weren't a clar' relation between dem pigs an' Providence den I don't know nothin'."

Miss Lydia took the same pious view of the matter, and made the Major the most dainty and dignified of wives.

Honeymoon Hotel Clerks.

"Gov. Stanford?" interrogated Bixler in a breathless manner, "We must have a honeymoon clerk."

"A what?"

"A honeymoon clerk down to the hotel, Monterer, you know. You see there's brides comin' every day. Dead loads of brides, lavender brides, Milpitas brides, Siskiyou brides, and all kinds and colors and previous conditions, and Schoenwald's no good."

"Why?"

"He don't understand brides; don't catch on to their feelin's. Some of 'em are scairt; new thing, you know, want to go home to their mothers; need a man to soothe 'em, kinder; talk to 'em and make things agreeable."

The governor looked thoughtful.

"There was a case the other night. Oakland bride. They found the groom out on the verandah at 2 in the mornin' cussin' and smashin' things. Bride had locked the door. Said she couldn't trust him. Had Schoenwald and two bell-boys arguing with her for two hours through the door, and then she wouldn't let him in."

"Well?"

"Nother case. San Pablo. Didn't eat any dinner. Went to room at 7:30. Half-past 8, gas all over the house. Watchman sniffed door-sills, and located it at San Pablo party; woke 'em up, half suffocated; said they'd blew out the gas; hadn't noticed anything strange. Now, if you had a good lively man that understood his business, a feller that could talk to 'em and make 'em better acquainted; warm up the Astoria kind, and keep 'em supplied with ice-cream—they don't eat nothing but ice-cream—why, there wouldn't be a bridal party on the whole coast that wouldn't take in the hotel, and mighty few from the [illegible]

"Do you know of such a man?"

"Oh, yes. I could get away most any time."

"Well," smiled the governor. "I'll see how the bride crop is and let you know. Salary no object?"

"Oh, no."

But the governor has not yet made up his decision.—San Francisco Wasp.

The Causes and Cure of Old Age.

L. Langer has recently been engaged in the comparative analysis of human fat at different ages. He finds that infant fat is harder than that of adults or old men, that there are oil globules in our fat, but none in that of babies; the microscope shows one or two oil globules in every fat cell of the adult, while very few have fat crystals. The fat cells of the infant contain no oil globules, and nearly every cell contains fat crystals. "Infant fat forms a homogeneous, white, solid, tallow-like mass, and melts at 45 deg. C., while adult fat standing in a warm room separates into two layers; the lighter and larger is a transparent yellow liquid which solidifies below the freezing point of water, the lower layer is a granular crystalline mass melting at 36 deg. C. Infant fat contains 67.75 per cent. of oleic acid, adult fat 89-80. Infant fat contains 28.97 per cent. of palmitic acid, against 8.16 in the adult, and 3.28 of stearic acid, against 2.04. These latter, the palmitic and stearic acids, are the harder and less fusible, while the oleic acid is the softer and more fusible constituent of fats.

No attempt is made to explain the reason of these differences, or to suggest any means by which we may reharden or repalmitize our fat, and thus regain our infant chubbiness.

Old age is evidently due to changes of this kind, not only of the fat, but also of the other materials of the body. The first step toward the discovery of the elixir of life, the "aurum potabile" of the alchemist, is to determine the nature of these changes, the next to ascertain their causes, and then to remove them. If, as we are so often told, there can be no effect without a cause, there must be causes for the organic changes constituting decay and old age. Remove these, and we live forever. The theory is beautifully simple.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Power of Gentle Influence.

If American scholarship does not carry the election to-day, it determines the policy of to-morrow. Calm, patient, confident, heroic in our busy and material life it perpetually vindicates the truth that the things which are unseen are eternal. So in the cloudless Summer sky serenely shines the moon, while the tumultuous ocean rolls and murmurs beneath, the type of illimitable and unbridled power. But resistlessly marshaled by celestial laws, all the wild waters, heaving from pole to pole, rise and recede, obedient to that mild Queen of heaven.—George W. Curtis.

Light Yield of Early Cheese.

The receipts of cheese in the large cities, and the transactions of the dairy boards of trade in all parts of the country, and a comparison of products in individual factories, all agree in showing a make of cheese in the spring months of 1882 smaller by about one-third than in the corresponding months of 1881. The number of cows has been rather increased than diminished, but the yield of milk has been less. Some of the early milk, which was formerly made into cheese, has been turned into butter, on account of the relatively higher price butter has borne all the spring than cheese. Butter at 30 cents is equal to cheese at 13 cents, but good butter has been above 30 cents and cheese below 13; the inducement, therefore, has been strong for turning all the milk, as far as it could well be done, into butter instead of cheese. But the chief deficiency in cheese has come from an unusually small product of milk from a given number of cows. This has come largely from poor keeping. Grain and mill feed have been higher than usual, and dairymen have hesitated about feeding these. The outlay from using extra feed was a certainty. The income from its use could not be so plainly seen, and hence many have withheld it, when there was more than the usual necessity for liberal feeding. In the first place, the price of butter has warranted full feeding. Where cows were fresh in milk, their increased product would have paid back even more than the full cost of the grain, and the cows have been improving in condition besides, and have been ready to do a full summer's work. By withholding the feed, a scanty return has been made during the spring, and the milk must be poor all the early part of summer, while the cows are using the substance of their food to restore the flesh previously lost.—National Live-Stock Journal, Chicago.

Ladies as Grain-dealers.

Two blooming ladies, fair to look upon and elegantly dressed, rode down on the street-car together to attend to the duties of the Women's Grain Exchange. One was a blonde, the other a pronounced brunette. They were much interested in discussing the present unsettled condition of the market, especially the decline in wheat, and so deeply engaged that they did not stop to think how extraordinary their conversation sounded in the ears of their uninitiated listeners. Said the blonde: "Oh, this drop is to be accounted for in many ways. The millers have shut off grinding, and because of the late fall farmers will not need so much grain for feed. Besides there is a good deal of monkey business among speculators, and they are banging away at each other without regard to the proprietory of things, or actual condition of the supply and demand."

"I tumbled into a pretty good thing on that last bust," said the brunette. "I don't care if the whole bottom falls out."

"I do," retorted the other; I am an awful bull; I believe in crowding. I'm longer now, and stood in for $1.30."

"Maybe I'd better straddle," suggested the other.

"No, don't you straddle anything.—That'll break up the best of 'em. You might as well try to straddle a buzz-saw."

This was too much for one of the passengers, a Board of Trade man, who smiled so evidently that the ladies were [illegible] the conductor to stop the car. There was a titter as the two got out.—New York Journal of Commerce.

He Was Satisfied.

A young society swell recently took advantage of a sunny afternoon to call on one of Chicago's belles for the purpose of inviting her to the theater. As the young lady in question was not in her sister undertook to entertain the young gentleman. After the usual limited round of society topics had been talked over the gentleman took the lady to task for her frequent adjectival appellation of "dear" and "darling" in speaking of her, averring that in his opinion it was affected. The young lady laughingly denied this. At this moment the absent sister was seen returning, and the incredulous young man proposed to put the matter to a test by concealing himself behind the curtains and thus overhear their conversation unhampered by society restrictions. The young lady assented to this plan with evident willingness, and the doubter was effectually concealed in the lace mazes of the curtain.

"Why, my dear, how long you have been absent," said she to the returning sister as she entered the parlor. "You dear darling, why did you not come sooner?" "Well," responded the matter of fact belle, "what in the world is the matter with you? Are you crazy?" The young man grinned in triumph behind the curtains; but now came the wily young lady's turn. "My dear," said she, "you don't know what you have missed. Mr. A. was here to invite you to the theater." Don't I," was the response. "I am glad I was absent. He is the silliest young man in Chicago."

There was a smothered groan, like the cry of Pe onius, behind the curtain.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"Biz," a Commercial Name.

"I never was in favor of war," said an old Arkansawer, "but I notice that some of the world's greatest men are not of my opinion. Now there's old Trademark. He's a great man, and he believes in war."

"Old who?" asked a bystander.

"Old Trademark."

"Who the deuce is Trademark?"

"No wonder they call us ignorant when such fellars as you show your lack of schoolin'. Didn't you never hear of the great German military man, Trademark?"

"I've heard of Bismarck."

"That's a fact. 'Bis'-mark. I knowed that it was some sort of a commercial name."

The train-boy, says Progress, has become a dandy. He is dressed in a neat uniform, and if you catch a glimpse of him a few moments before the train starts you will see him carefully arranging his hair before one of the looking-glass panels of the car. He is still addressed as prize packages, but he peddles them now with graceful dignity.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and [illegible] the chills.

THE county political pot begins to simmer, and as soon as the rush of harvest is over it will be boiling at a lively rate.

Do Not Be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and one that will do as recommended. They invariably cure Stomach and Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle, by all druggists.

Important to Travelers.

Special Inducements are offered you by the BURLINGTON ROUTE. It will pay you to read their advertisement to be found elsewhere in this issue.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, Indigestion, Nervousness and Rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off the foul matter.—N. O. Picayune.

The Flower God.

BY EDWARD WILLETT.

A cave-born child, to manhood nearly grown,
Who never yet had seen a tree or flower
Or any living green thing of the earth,
Was taken to the sunshine, where a pot
Of earth was set, and in the pot a seed
Was planted, and they bade him wait and watch.

Two little leaves burst through the mellow soil,
At which he marvelled greatly; then two more;
Then leaf by leaf the plant built up itself,
A miracle of color and of form,
Instinct with life. He knew it was alive,
And spake to it, and when it answered not
He deemed himself beneath it, ignorant
Of the fine language that the wonder knew.

At last there came a bud, and then a bloom!
Slowly at first, then with a sudden throe
That trembled through the tissues of the plant,
A crimson glory opened to the sun,
A revelation to the poor youth's soul
Of beauty sprung from utter ugliness.

He fell before it, prone upon his face,
Then lifted up his wondering eyes and knelt,
And worshipped it, and it became his god.

One morning early when he sought his shrine,
The frost had been before him, and the plant,
Bloom, leaf, and stalk, upon the ugly earth
Lay like a blot, a shapeless, loathsome mass,
And soon there was no trace of it at all.

Then to the awestruck youth there came a sage,
Who mildly asked him: Where is now thy god?

His staring eyes were fixed on vacancy,
His face was half transfigured, as he spake,
And said: Awhile ago, and it was here;
A little while—now it is everywhere.
Fear not my master; it will come again.

What Is a Mascotte.

Both dictionaries and scholars fail to answer the question, which the opera with the title constantly raises, what is a mascotte? But the visitors of Monte Carlo tell us it is a fetich—a luck-bringer. All gamblers are superstitious, and draw their inspirations from the oddest circumstances. A mascotte may be a sou or a sixpence with a hole in it, a button, a lock of hair, anything which the punter has associated with a lucky turn. Alms to a beggar—mascotte; denial of alms—mascotte; seeing a hunchback or a white horse—mascotte; meeting a black cat—mascotte. Three years ago a little hunchback, at Monaco derived large returns from standing near the table and rubbing his hump at the request of the players. He had a tariff. Once, 5 francs; a long rubbing, 10 francs; for standing half an hour behind a curtain player and not rubbing for others, 20 francs. At the end of the season, returning to Paris on the train, he was seen to throw away his hump. Mascotte is the opposite of jettatura, or the evil eye.

His Great Gain.

Some said he was killed, and others asserted that he was only dangerously hurt, but when the reporter pushed through the crowd, he discovered that the victim had simply lost a thumb by the fall of the plank he was assisting to raise.

It was his left thumb, and he was a strawberry peddler, and had measured that thumb over ten thousand times.

"Poor man! I see how it is," sighed the reporter. "This is a terrible loss to you just at the opening of the berry season."

"Hush! Mum is the word!" whispered the poor fellow, as he started for the surgeon's. "It was only a small thumb, anyhow, and for $3.50 I can get an artificial one which takes up half a great gain to me, sir—a great gain. With the sympathy of the public and a wooden thumb with a rag around it, I shall make the best season in twenty years. Straw-bu-ries! Straw-bu-ries—heap the measure for twen-ty-f-i-v-e cents!"

Monument to Bayard Taylor.

Above the grave of Bayard Taylor, in the Longwood Cemetery, near his former home of Cedarcroft, Kennett Square, Pa., has been placed a handsome monument of gray Indiana lime-stone. Its form is that of an ancient Greek altar, on the drum of which is a bronze bas-relief of the poet, half encircled by a wreath of bay and oak. Underneath is the inscription:

BAYARD TAYLOR.
January 11, 1825—December 19, 1878.

The other side of the monument bears these lines from Mr. Taylor's poem "Prince Deukalion:"

For life, whose source not here began,
Must fill the utmost sphere of man;
And so, expanding, lifted be
Along the line of God's decree,
To find in endless growth all good—
In endless toil, beatitude.

Over this is a butterfly carved in relief. The frieze, surmounted by a plain cornice, bears simply the text:
"He being dead yet speaketh."—[Heb., xi., 4.

A Queer Family.

In the southern part of Dutchess County, among the mountains, stands a strange and lonely habitation, in which a curious race of people has dwelt for many generations. Their progenitor was an Irishman named Heady. They are called the "Headies," and they claim to be partly of Indian origin. Their ancient home has been called "The Woodbine" ever since the days of the log cabin from which the present structure grew. The vine which covers the front of the house would sufficiently account for this appellation, but it was also the name of the Indian girl from whose union with the Irish Heady the race has sprung. The story is that the father and founder of the colony lived to see his descendants of the fifth generation, and that before he died he called them all about him and, giving to each a sprig of the vine, bade him plant it before his new home, for they had become so numerous that they must separate. Some built near the old house and some far away, and only a few are now left; but a luxuriant growth of woodbine covers all the mountain side.

In some Eastern countries the larger shells of the mother-of-pearl family are used in the construction of houses.—Mounted on a framing of wood, they make at once strong and elegant panels, blinds for windows, etc. The Cathedral and other sacred edifices at Panama are lined with shells, and the soft light they diffuse is said to have a most pleasing effect.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll is reported to have lost $50,000 by investing in an ill-starred Colorado mining enterprise.

Curious Advertisements.

Some venerable old print has collected the following very curious advertisements, which are worthy of a careful perusal:

"I would like this advertisement translated into French," handing to a clerk in the American Register office the following curious advertisement: "Twenty francs reward will be paid for the recovery of a cameo brooch which represents Venus and Adonis lost on the Boulevard des Italiens about ten o'clock last evening."

But the literary productions of advertisers who have axes to grind, and who pay liberally for the privilege of occupying space, have before proved very interesting bits of reading in the columns of a well-edited paper.

H. H. Brown & Co., of No. — Centre street, kept standing for several weeks in a leading New York daily: "Soldiers who have lost their discharges, and those who did not receive pension from the date of their discharge or death, please apply."

In the "Wants" department of a country exchange, a resident advertises for a "woman to wash, iron and milk one or two cows."

A wine merchant asks for bids for "sixty dozen of prime port, lately the property of a gentleman forty years of age, full in body, and with a high bouquet."

A livery stable keeper offers cheap "a mail phaeton, the property of a gentleman with a movable head as good as new," and "a splendid gray horse, calculated for a charger, or would carry a lady with a switch tail and warranted kind."

It is easier for some people to determine what they want than to ask for it. Words are bugbears to them and language takes terrible shapes.

"To be sold—A grand piano, the property of a lady about to travel in a walnut case with carved legs" was humorously commented upon by the Saturday Review a few months ago.

The Irish World copies an item: "A purse lost by a poor widow woman who has a sick child containing 12s. and a letter." No wonder the child was unwell. The next item in the column is the World's own, and is as follows: "Robert Taylor, 83 years, is the father of twenty-five children by three wives seventeen of whom are living." Robert should be tried for bigamy.

The Chicago Tribune not long since, copied the advertisement of a widow who intended to succeed her husband in the management of a hotel. "The hotel will be kept by a widow of the former landlord, Mr. Brown, who died last Summer on a new and improved plan." She will be aided by other stockholders. Such a corporation would not deserve to have a soul.

A coroner's verdict reads thus: "The deceased came to his death by excessive drinking, producing apoplexy in the minds of the jury."

A country paper says: A child was run over by a wagon 3 years old, and crosseyed, with pantalets on.

The above reminds us of the poem handed to John Phœnix relative to the young man who "on the Pecos river was axdentally shot." Referring to the weapon, the poet said "it was one of the old style brass-mounted, and of such is the kingdom of Heaven."—Bloomington Eye.

The New Game of Moll-Buzzing.

A new feature in crime now claims public attention. Harry Woods, an Englishman, was arrested in New York for pocket picking, in which he had displayed a degree of skill which proved him to be a London expert. His peculiar lay is known in the parlance of the tombs as "moll-buzzing," and the method is as follows: The victim stated that while in the crowd at the ferry, he was addressed by an interesting young woman who was in much trouble. She had lost her way and wanted explicit directions to reach home. He became so much occupied in assisting this unfortunate creature that he was easily relieved of his pocket-book. Another complained that he too had been victimized by the woman and her pal, who were in both cases the same. Their plan is very apparent. "Moll-buzzes" in order to engage the victim's attention while her pal picks his pocket. This "moll-buzzer" has taken large hauls this season, but at last has been brought to justice. It is certainly a neat and original way of "working the crowd."

A Foreign Imitation with a Long Name.

A fashion paper says: "Aromatic ozonized cassolettes, or little sachets to carry in the pocket or hang around the neck to preserve the wearer from infection, is a London caprice which has not yet reached America." This fashion paper is not reliable. If the editor had taken the pains to inquire about the styles out in this center of civilization he would have found that cassolette has been a cherished institution for the last forty or fifty years. It is not called a cassolette, nor is it strictly aromatic, being simply a flannel bag stuffed with assfetida or camphor, and it is a trifle worse than any disease, but the principle is the same. The London article is a base imitation, and should be so branded.

The following is a verbatim copy of a "bill of the play," picked up on the streets of Havana, Ill., the authorship of which is attributed to some of the little misses of the town: "The Great Theater—At Dr. Harpham's barn, Saturday afternoon. Doors open at 2 o'clock. No one aloud after half-past 2. Admission 5 pins. Ice water and candy, 10 pins. Fans, 4 pins. The actors are Oscar Wilde, Miss Adelina Patti, Miss Neilson, and little Eva. Usher, Miss Mary Anderson. No boys aloud. If the bills are not handed in at the door, you are not admitted. 4 pins to see the nigger show after the theater."

Improvement for Mind and Body.

There is more strength-restoring power in a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids consequently find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body.—Commercial.

And now our dear Arabi Hubbell
Has again got himself into trouble,
For tryin' to rake Ferry's stubble;
The big Senatorial bubble,
Which Jay was a blowin' up double,
Has busted—Alas, for poor Hubbell!

The freight handlers' strike in New York and Jersey City is about ended, a lot of pauper laborers having been imported from Europe to take the places of the strikers. Our beautiful tariff does not protect labor. Supply and demand is the rule for the laborer, and the law offers him no protection in the price he places upon his wares.

The regents of the University have done a wise, although tardy act, in dismissing Dr. Joy. And their hesitation has placed them in the rather humiliating position of being crowded into this action by the threats of Profs. Maclean and Frothingham. In controversies of this character a little heroic treatment at the inception of the quarrel frequently saves much embarrassment and trouble afterwards. Now that the Regents have done the one thing necessary to restore harmony, we shall expect to see the end of this scandalous controversy.

The congressional campaign begins to open in this district, and the candidates of Republican persuasion are already in training. Hillsdale has three candidates—E. L. Koon, Albert Dickerman and E. O. Grosvenor. Lenawee has three—John K. Boies, Thos. F. Moore and Dr. Rynd. Monroe has two—Edwin Willetts and Gen. Spaulding. Washtenaw has four—A. J. Sawyer, E. P. Allen, E. D. Kinne and Dr. Smith. On the Democratic side the victims have not yet presented their claims, and both the Greenbackers and Prohibitionists have yet to speak. The Republicans can name a man who will certainly win or they can easily make the District a doubtful one.

In the July number of the International Review is a powerful article by W. C. Ford upon "Reform in Taxation." It is treated from a non-partisan standpoint and cannot fail to awaken thought and command attention. We will give our readers one or two little nibbles from it:

The national tax system of this country is at present yielding a revenue of nearly $150,000,000 annually in excess of all the necessary demands for government purposes. This is in excess of all that is required for the civil service, for all the pensions, for the interest of the public debt, and for all other charges whatsoever that the efficiency of the government and the support of the public credit demand, together with many charges of a questionable character. This excess is equivalent to an annual tax of about five dollars per capita of population. There is not the slightest reason for maintaining such an excess of taxation. There are no war clouds to be feared, the country is fairly prosperous, and the requirements of government are fulfilled. That no evil has shown itself is not saying that no evil has been done. The body politic, like the body physical, must pay the penalty for any abuse of its functions; and no one can doubt that the present taxes are exorbitant and unnecessary, and therefor an evil. The cardinal principle of taxation is that revenue should be governed by expenditure. So far from recognizing this principle, until very recently, an exactly opposite principle has been adopted, that expenditure should be governed by revenue. Raise all the revenues that can be raised with the present taxes, and congress will see that there is no difficulty in spending it. Is this just to the taxpayer? Is it defensible on any grounds whatever, whether of a political or economic nature? One million, fifty million, or one hundred million dollars of revenue may be raised in excess of all that the government can, under any possible contingency require, yet no serious attempt is made to reduce the revenue. The taxes under which this revenue is raised may be opposed to all the principles of economics, yet no attempt is made to reform them. They may be unequal in their incidence, and weigh more heavily upon particular classes or interests, yet no change is proposed by which they may be made more equal. Their effect may be to favor certain interests at the expense of others, yet no outcry against such legalized robbery is raised. The existence of such a surplus is a source of danger, for it is a constant temptation for extravagent expenditures by the government. "The very best of all finance," says a French economist, Say, "is to spend little, and the best taxation of all is that which is least in amount." Let the taxes be reduced, but let the reduction be governed by some well recognized policy.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS.

ED. HERALD:—First impressions have a value, and where they are as favorable as those of the writer about Tecumseh, there is a temptation to express them. According to oriental magnificence of description the ancient city of Damascus was called "A pearl surrounded by emeralds." Here, about this western town, numbering hardly there years of existence than the city spoken of does of centuries, we have the emerald setting. It could not well be fairer, though the western pearl, like the eastern one, may have its defects and blemishes. A stranger can hardly fail to be struck at once by the homelike appearance of the town. There is an air of comfort about its shaded streets and well kept lawns, smoothly shaven, many of them cut to the highway track. The business quarter also is cleanly and attractive. The opera house and central high school are buildings that could do credit to a much larger place. Few places of its size can boast as fine and well appointed churches. A hotel, commodious and comfortable, greets the traveller—two of them open their doors in fact to entertain the public. Recently that latest invention of a talkative age, the telephone, has arrived, and now those that are fond of the ruder forms of salutation can say Hello to their heart's content.

Nature did so much of herself for Tecumseh that there could be slight excuse if the people did not keep it a lovely spot—one so attractive that its absent citizens would always be glad to hasten home, wherever they might be. From the pains apparently taken to have all things and to keep up with the improvements of the day we judge there is to be no occasion for excuse. One shrinks back a little at first from accepting cheerfully the name selected by its founders for this pleasant spot. Why, when only a vision of beauty was to be conjured up was there a name selected suggestive of wig-wams and war-whoops, and scalping-knives and savages? Some of the most beautiful names we have for the localities of our land, are the gift of its Aborigines. But, Tecumseh? Well, he was doubtless a hero in his way, and by his devotion to his own people earned the right to have his name perpetuated by a race he hated cordially and did his best to shut out from the territory of his fathers. It is a good name to help keep before us the contrasts of the present and the past. What a contrast between Tecumseh and his brawny, tawny braves, on the war path, and that bright broom brigade whose graceful evolutions we looked down upon, from the gallery of the opera house, on the P. M. of July the 3th, 1882!—also from that one, all armed and equipped, that kept step to the martial music in the earlier part of Independence day; the one that carried sterner weapons than the broom.

One caveat to the general expression of approbation must be entered. When a blot is found on an otherwise fair scene, it seems the fouler for its surroundings. The blot on this fair scene is, saloons. We passed them and the odors that came forth were not those of Araby. We found them on the main streets, in the conspicuous places, doing, we judge, a paying business. One of them was screening its customers, whom it was making slaves, behind the stars and stripes, the emblem of our liberty.—Never did our national colors seem more out of place. We do not hold that temperance is the sum of all virtue. But it occupies a prominent place in the catalogue. Seek to palliate the traffic in intoxicating drinks as we may, there is no denying that the fewer saloons a place has the better, as a place of residence. Are the good people of Tecumseh awake to the danger that is upon them? Are they aware of the harm there is in having places open, so many of them, which are educating the young into the belief that they can innocently step in now and then and take something to drink? There may be but little drunkenness now, but what is it coming to? The noble sentiments of our 4th of July oration in the grove are worthy of being remembered, including those on temperance. Gentlemen of the saloons, we wish you well, but not your business.

We have been told of an interesting course of lectures given last winter in Tecumseh. Expecting to tarry here for the winter we would like to know if there will not soon be a movement made for another course? To command the best talent, and in this case as in so many others the best is the cheapest, it is necessary to speak early. Such men as Prof. Richards, of Chicago, who has brilliant experiments to give with lecture on Electricity and Magnetism, &c., make their engagements early. Shall we not hear speedily that the matter has been taken in hand and that one of the attractions for the winter which is approaching is a course of lectures and entertainments of which the most cultured community might be proud?

MY AMATEUR FARM.

FOURTEENTH WEEK.

Heat, ma'am; it was so dreadful here that I found there was nothing left for it but to take off my flesh and sit in my bones.—SIDNEY SMITH.

The full ripe corn is bending
In waves of golden light,
The new mown hay is sending
Its sweets upon the night;
The breeze is softly sighing
To cool the parched flowers,
The rain, to see them dying,
Weeps forth its gentle showers;
The merry fish are playing
Adown yon cheerful stream,
And night from day is straying,
As twilight gives its gleam.
—THOMAS J. QUEELEY.

Sunday morning, July 3d, opened as hot as a political debate in the lower House of Congress during the dog days. By nine o'clock old Sol was pelting his rays with pitiless force upon the heads of poor mortals here below. The heat was so intense that neither man nor animal could endure it. It was fortunate that no work was on the carpet for that day, for none would have been done. It was a task to eat breakfast, it was hard work to dress one's self, and it was absolute torture to take one's accustomed morning's nap in church. Shortly after dinner, the mercury in the thermometer went up so high that it got lost, and when Ichabod made this discovery he grew pale with fright. "Why, young man," said he, as he emptied his shoes and dipped the perspiration out of his pantaloon's pockets with a tablespoon, "I've seen a good many hot days over'n Canada but this lays over anything I ever seen afore. I've seen weather that would roast eggs in the shade, that would melt the handle off a tin dipper in just three minutes, that would peal the bark off a tamarack pole in an hour's time, that would curl up the T rails on the railroad track, that would dry up such a reservoir as the Globe Mill pond in just one week, that would cook the fish in the river, and that would even make the potato bugs turn up their toes. But I never seen a day before when the mercury went up out o' sight. Now, young man, something has got to be did afore to-morrow. Neither man nor boss can work in such weather. We've got more hay to cut and we've got hay to haul in. The mowin' machine and lumber wagon never could live through such a day as this. The machine would melt down and the wagon box would be teetotally blistered. The mowin' machine can be stored in the ice house over night, and the lumber wagon can be put down cellar. We can give the hosses a feed o' bran mash mixed with ice water and vinegar three times a day, and have the village barber sand-paper their heads before going into the field with 'em to-morrow. I shall buy me a waistcoat made of fly netting, and a palm leaf hat two [illegible] bare footed the rest of the week, and throw aside his suspenders. We must have special diet too for this hot spell. Pork and beans wont do for this hot weather. A little cold pea porridge with an egg in it will make a good breakfast. A dozen raw onions sandwiched with Johnny cake toast make a handsome dinner. Supper can be served with four cups o' tea, some cold pork and mustard and a few ginger cookies. By takin' these precautions we may get through the week without catchin' a sunstroke, or the yeller fever."

We then examined the thermometer and found that the baby had broken the bulb off and let the mercury escape from the bottom of the tube. Upon making this discovery Columbus breathed easier and concluded it was safe to leave the mower and lumber wagon out doors over night, but his other suggestions were duly carried out.

Monday, July 4th.—Columbus cut another acre of grass in the west hay field. To prevent any over heating, he oiled the mowing machine with ice water and put a large cabbage leaf in the top of his hat. He also took a good long nooning, from ten A.M. till two P.M. After dinner he and Ellic drew three loads of hay in the barn. It was a fearfully hot day.

Tuesday, July 5th.—Columbus and Ellic raked and put up the hay cut yesterday. The heat melted all the fork handles off and Ichabod had to go down after three new forks. The boys had hard work to get through the day without bushing, but they presented themselves at the supper table in good shape. A very hot day.

Wednesday, July 6th.—Ichabod cut another acre of hay in the forenoon. Ellic got some bran for horse feed and some middlings for the cows. In the afternoon they raked up the hay cut yesterday and rolled it into bunches. Columbus came to the house about four o'clock in the afternoon, vowing that he had a sun-stroke. His wife gave him a quart of pea porridge, which revived him, and he put up ten more bunches of hay before tea-time.

Thursday, July 7th.—Hotter than ever to-day. The boys turned out a lot of hay, preparatory to drawing it in, and the hay was nicely spread, when a heavy shower came up. It blew fearfully and the rain fell in torrents for about fifteen minutes. After the shower the boys found most of the hay in the adjoining field east. They spent the afternoon gathering the hay up and putting it in bunches again.

Friday, July 8th.—Ichabod and Ellic spread out hay in the forenoon. In the afternoon they drew two loads into a stack west of the big barn. Columbus, while unloading the last load, ran a fork tine in one of his great toes which laid him up for the balance of the day. Another big thunder shower just at night, which was a damper on the hay stack, as it had not been topped out.

Saturday, July 9th.—Another scorcher. The boys turned the hay stack up side down to let it dry out. They then stacked it over in another place and put on a third load to top it out. Drew in three more loads into the barn. A wagon tire ran off just after dinner which caused a delay of about two hours. Hired George Marshall to work to-day. He is a painter by trade but can pitch hay as easily and expeditiously as he slings a paint brush. With his help we turned out a good day's work, notwithstanding the thermometer was prancing around among the nineties.

Old Sol is just a boiling,
He's getting on a spree,
His pelting rays descending
Upon the pond and tree.
The onion sets are wilting,
The squash are roasting out,
The pea crop is in danger
Of going up the spout.
The rain comes down in torrents
Upon the new mown hay,
The morning's cut is ruined
Before the close of day.
The torrid heat of midday
Has no respite through the night,
The duck in the weather glass
Has gone up out of sight.

THE Raisin Valley re-union association will hold its nineteenth annual meeting on the Seminary grounds on Friday, Aug. 11th, 1882. Literary exercises will commence at 2:30 P. M., after which dinner will be served by the Superintendent. Dinner tickets 50 cents. Business meeting after dinner. Oration by Levi Deline. Poem by Clara Hicks.

THE Gardener's Monthly for August put in its appearance promptly. It has entertaining articles on the adornment of small yards, steam heating, history of a 5-cent paper of seeds, the best strawberry, bulb growing in Holland, and the usual amount of small scraps and items. It is a very valuable number. Send for a sample copy to C. H. Marot, 814 Chestnut St. Philadelphia.

MR. AND MRS. S. W. ANDERSON gave a pleasant reception last Monday evening to the class of '68. The class, of which Mrs. Anderson was a member, numbered eleven, and it is significant that the entire number are living and only three of them are married. It was impossible to have the entire class attend, but those who were present reviewed school day life with that vigorous memory and hilarity which only a student can maintain. A collation of delicious ice cream and cake was served, and at a late hour the guests reluctantly exchanged farewell.

WE notice by the Sparta Sentinel that R. A. Maynard is mentioned as a candidate for County Clerk of Kent county on the republican ticket. Mr. Maynard is one of our whilom Macon friends. His father, Rev. J. H. Maynard, was for some years pastor of the Free Will Baptist church at Pennington's Corners, and at the time of his residence there Mr. R. A. Maynard was considered a very promising young man. Should he secure the nomination and election Kent county can rely upon having an efficient and faithful clerk. Mr. Maynard is the present supervisor of the township of Sparta.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH. AUG. 3, 1882.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

MISS EMMA SMITH is visiting friends in Adrian.

THE officers had several drunks under arrest last Saturday.

MISS ALLIE WARREN is spending a few days among the "Hoosiers" at LaGrange, Ind.

MRS. GEO. W. STEVENS, of Jonesville, is spending a few days in Tecumseh with her sister, Mrs. W. T. Eccles.

MRS. GEO. STILLSON, of Connecticut, nee Josie Landon, is making a visit of a few weeks with her many Tecumseh friends.

MISS EMMA CONKLIN left Tecumseh last Monday afternoon for Peoria, Ill., where she will remain the coming fall and winter.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will preach on Sabbath A. M., —"God's notice of little things," and in the P. M., "Some lessons from the harvest."

GUS SLAYTON measured and shipped 50,000 feet of lumber last week, nearly all white oak, and yet he was away from home less than three days.

MISS EMMA HAWKE, the Adrian telephone operator, spent Sunday last in Tecumseh, the guest of Miss Eva Clement, the Tecumseh manipulator of the wires.

ABNER WILSON sold a full-bred Poland China pig the other day to Elwood Biddle, of Saline. His stock is the best and he does not charge fancy prices either.

ST. JOHNS has a brass band composed of seventeen ladies. Our Tecumseh band is not quite so numerous as that, but what it lacks in quantity it makes up in quality.

THE township school inspectors met at Adrian last Saturday and elected Ira Waterman, of Hudson, on the board of county examiners to succeed C. D. West, whose term of office expires.

WE acknowledge the receipt of a complimentary ticket to the next exhibition of the Mich. State Agricultural Society. The fair will open at Jackson on Monday, Sept. 18th, and continue during the week.

NEXT Saturday evening Lavern Wheeler will begin his series of stereopticon lectures at the Opera House. We hope and feel confident that they will be well patronized. Let us give our townsman a good send off in his enterprise.

BURGLARS were abroad in the village last Monday night. Dr. Hamilton's house was entered, but the family were aroused and the gentry left without getting any booty. Two or three other houses were broken into, but nothing of any value was taken.

THE new Brooklyn Fair Association will give a trotting matinee on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, Aug. 9th and 10th. This, we believe, is the first public exhibition of the association, and efforts are making to have it worthy of a large patronage.

Co. C has received their new caps from the State and sported them at drill last evening. The company has mustered in a large number of new men lately, and the boys are becoming very proficient in drill. The company will leave here for camp next Wednesday morning.

THE Adrian scientific society yesterday received from R. & J. Beck, London, England, a large and handsome microscope, having a magnifying power of 850 diameters.—Record. Turn it up toward New Mexico and Chicago, and see if you can see anything of Tom.—Detroit Eve. News.

IMMEDIATELY after the heavy shower on Tuesday last the Brownville pond reached the highest point it has marked in forty years. Fortunately the gates all worked well and in ten minutes every available space for the escape of water was opened and the flood was pouring into the river below.

Adrian Times: The story that the citizens of Tecumseh have moved to Sand lake in a body since the organization of the ladies' brass band in that village, proves, upon investigation, to be untrue.

But when the broom brigade and the young ladies' band both go to Sand lake in a body it makes a pretty big hole in our census list.

NEWTON HAIGHT, of Louisville, Ky. while recently visiting his cousin, R. R. Hall, claimed to have been the first man in the world that ever run a steam thresher, which was in the fall of 1856. Mr. Haight was born in the township of Raisin, and now holds a prominent position on the Union Pacific Railroad.

LAST Tuesday afternoon Tecumseh was literally flooded and it seemed for an hour or so as if another deluge had come. The streets were flooded, cellars were filled with water, several houses were deluged with water coming down the chimneys, chickens were drowned by the dozen, several buildings were struck by lightning and a general havoc played.

Capt. Ed. P. Allen, of Ypsilanti, has been confirmed Indian agent for this state.

V. B. CRANE, of St. Louis, Mo., was at home last week enjoying a short vacation.

MISS STELLA SAXTON of Manchester is the guest of the Rev. H. Shepard this week.

WE acknowledge the receipt from Mrs. Spaulding of a beautiful floral piece as a birthday offering. Her kindness and thoughtfulness are appreciated.

JOHN S. CLARK and J. S. Kies, of Clinton, have erected a nice little summer cottage on the north shore of Sand lake, near C. H. Adam's hotel. Last Tuesday evening they were to dedicate the cottage with a "house warming." If it rained there as it did here, the dedication ceremonies probably consisted of a good ducking.

THE new wheat crop is coming into market freely and the Tecumseh mills are all in full blast. Hayden is already sending a large invoice across the big water, and Heck Bros. ditto. Comfort's trade is more domestic than foreign, but he has all the orders to fill which his mill can turn out. The millers are unanimous in the statement that better flour was never made out of new wheat than that which the present crop produces.

TELEPHONE TALK.

The thunder shower last Tuesday afternoon put an embargo on business over the telephone lines for some time. One heavy stroke of lightning dropped the thirty enunciators on the switchboard all at once, and half a dozen of them were dropped several times during the shower.

The local lines seem to be all working satisfactorily now. All the instruments have been put in which the present switchboard can accommodate but a larger switchboard has been ordered and will be here in a few days, when several additional subscribers are expected.

The Toledo line is being pushed forward and communication with that city may be expected very soon.

A certain farmer from Ridgeway, Mr. W., called at Hayden's mill Saturday morning with a load of wheat, and Jerry offered him $1,00 per bushel therefor. "Why," said he, "Woolston offered me $1,03 for it yesterday." "Is that so?" said Jerry, "we will see." So he telephoned down to Woolston, and in about two minutes got a reply that Woolston had not seen Mr. W. in over ten days.

We have the night bell in our office put up now, and have a boy engaged to "bunk" in the office nights. Subscribers to the local exchange, if their business requires it, can "Hello" at any hour of the night and their call will be answered in due season. The same plan is adopted at Adrian, so that messages can be sent to that office also at any hour during the night. Our night watchman will be provided with a key to the door of the HERALD building opening into the Opera House alley, which may be a convenience to people desiring to send night messages.

ILLUMINATED RAMBLES.

The Opening Season of L. F. Wheeler's Series of Stereopticon Lectures.

We had occassion to mention a while ago that Mr. L. F. Wheeler had purchased a stereopticon of the largest size, and was preparing a series of illuminated lectures for public exhibition. His arrangements have been perfected and he will open the season here in his old home on Saturday evening next. His first series of "Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands" consists of four lectures which will be presented at the opera house on Saturday evening of this week and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings of next week. Below we give the program for each evening.

Saturday evening, Aug. 5—Rambles in Ireland, England, and Scotland. Dublin, Cork, Lakes of Killarney, Counties of Wicklow, Wexford, Tipperary, Cork, Clare, Antrim and Meath, Londonderry, Belfast, Liverpool, London, Rochester, Edinburg.

Tuesday evening, Aug. 8—Rambles in Scotland, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Russia: Balmoral, Loch Katrine, Loch Ness, Inverness, Glasgow, Aberdeen; Rotterdam, Amsterdam; The Hague; St. Petersburg, English Cathedrals and Abbeys.

Thursday evening, Aug. 10—Rambles in Russia, Spain, and Italy: Moscow; Madrid, Segonia, Aranjuuez, Cordova, Cadiz; Gibraltar, Malaga, Granada, Sarragosa, Cadeusa, Valencia, Carthagena; Milan, Venice.

Saturday evening, Aug. 12—Rambles in Italy: Venice, Florence, Naples, Pompei.

Mr. Fred Van Camp will give one or two cornet solos each evening which will add very much to the excellence of the entertainment.

The price for a season ticket for the entire course is placed at the very modest figure of 75 cents, which ought to insure a full house. Mr. Wheeler should have the satisfaction of seeing his first public exhibition well patronized, and we believe he will. In the first place the lectures will be entertaining in themselves, and secondly our citizens owe it to themselves to give their fellow townsman a good send off in the enterprise he has undertaken.

NEWBERRY SATTERTHWAITE has been granted leave of absence for a vacation of one month. He departed this morning for Petoskey where he will probably spend most of his vacation.

THE Red Ribbon Club have rented Heesen's hall and will hereafter hold its meetings therein, commencing next Monday evening. It is hoped that the members of the club will remember this and make a general rally.

THE members of the class of '68 who enjoyed the reunion at Mr. & Mrs. S. W. Anderson's the other evening desire to return their thanks for the happy thought which prompted the meeting and for the hospitality shown them on that occasion.

JOHN MCKINNEY, a former resident of Tecumseh, and for the past few years a resident of Calhoun Co., died last Monday of cancer. He was a mason of good reputation while here, and worked with James McNair in the erection of many brick buildings in this village and vicinity.

THE beneficial effects of the telephone are daily made manifest. President A. W. Mills placed instruments in his office and residence on the 21st of July and five days later he was crying "Hello" to a beautiful young daughter. You could'nt take that telephone out of his house now for a straight hundred dollars.

A BOLT struck John Neely's barn, in Raisin, Tuesday afternoon, and killed seven large hogs which he was intending to market next week. The barn was struck twice, but no harm was done except the laying low of the swine. A horse was also struck and although it did not seem to be injured at the time it was afterward discovered that the horse was stone deaf. The corn in the manger from which the horse was eating was scattered over the floor.

DR. W. F. FROTHINGHAM, the eminent English specialist, can be consulted at the Sink Hotel until Saturday, Aug. 5th, 2 p. m. The Dr. comes to our city with a reputation well deserved by his great success in treating Chronic Diseases. For years his name has been almost a household word in the entire northwest. This is a special opportunity to see the Dr. as he is now visiting a few of the cities in our State his purpose being to open up a route over which some one of his assistants will travel during every 30 days in the future. Those who desire to consult the Dr. personally should call upon him before the date above given.

The free open air concerts given under the direction of Dr. Dickinson, who each evening delivers a short lecture, are attended by large numbers of our prominent citizens. The music is of a high order, and we advise all to attend. Consultation and advice, at the office are FREE, but a ticket must be procured. They can be had at the hotel office or parlor or at the evening entertainments. Office hours from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M.

A Card.

To our neighbors and friends who ministered so faithfully to us in our sudden and terrible affliction we would extend our heartfelt thanks.

MRS. P. TRAIN AND CHILDREN.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our thanks to our neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy with us during the long illness of our beloved mother. MR. & MRS. J. W. AYERS.

Tecumseh, July 28, 1882.

A Sudden Death.

Last Monday evening as Mr. Geo. Train was sitting in Patterson's drug store, while the clerk was putting up some groceries for him, he suddenly placed his hand upon his right side, uttered a gasp and expired. He was engaged in conversation with Stephen Whittier at the time, who noticed nothing unusual in his actions until the fatal moment came. The deceased, although advanced in years, had always enjoyed reasonably good health, and was able to attend to his daily avocations without trouble. He has been for some time carrying the daily mail between here and Ridgeway. His death was undoubtedly caused by heart disease. The funeral services were held at his house yesterday afternoon at one o'clock and were conducted by Rev. H. Shepard, his pastor, assisted by Rev. R. S. Pardington. The deceased had been a resident of Tecumseh for twenty-seven years, and was an uncle of the eccentric George Francis Train.

THE TECUMSEH SCHOOLS.

Their Present Condition and the Outlook for the Coming Year.

The public schools of this village were placed upon a solid foundation by the prudent and far-seeing men who organized them, and shaped public policy with reference to their management at an early day. In addition to the wisdom displayed by the early school officers, Tecumseh has been very fortunate in securing good superintendents and accomplished teachers. Profs. Esterbrook, Nash, Lawton, Thomas and Spencer form a galaxy of names of which any village or city in Michigan might well be proud. The standard of excellence heretofore established has been well maintained during the past two years, and the Board of Trustees confidently anticipate a continuance of the same during the coming school year. The following teachers have been engaged for the next year.

Prof. D. A. Hammond, Miss Louise C. Kahler, Miss Ella A. Ludwig, Miss Maggie Sherrard, Miss Manie Monaghan, Miss Etta Wilson, Miss Florence Shepard, Miss Metta McBride, Miss Grace Parkhurst, Miss May Henderson, Miss Nannie Kyle.

In anticipation of a largely increased attendance in the fall, a new school room is being fitted up in the third story of the Central building which will be ready for use, in case the necessity for it should arise. The courses of study will remain substantially as they were last year, but in addition to them a special teacher's class will be organized at the opening of the fall term. Prof. Hammond's previous experience and training eminently qualify him for managing a special class of this kind. Miss Kahler, whose excellence in higher English branches and modern languages is well known, will be ably assisted by Miss Ella Ludwig, who is a graduate of the Coldwater high school and has passed two years in the full classical course at the State University. The teachers employed for the Grammar and Primary grades are fully competent to fill their respective positions.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission to the different grades will not be required to undergo any severe examination, only such as will enable the examiner to decide whether the candidate is able to do the work of the proposed grade.

Those applying for admission to the High School should come prepared to pass an examination in Practical Arithmetic, Spelling, Geography, English Grammar, and United States History.

Pupils will find it to their interest to be present at the opening of the term, as any delay is largely detrimental to success. Pupils are received at any time, however, and placed in classes suited to their attainments.

EXPENSES.

Tuition is free to resident pupils. Non-resident pupils are charged in advance as follows:

High School department, $5.00 per term. Grammar department, $4.00 per term. Primary department, $3.50 per term.

Twelve weeks constitute a term in payment of tuition. All tuition must be paid within ten days after the student's admission to school, to the Director, who will give a receipt for the same.

Good board and lodging can be procured at from $2.00 to $4.00, and rooms at from 50 cents to $1.25 per week.

Many students, by clubbing together and boarding themselves, materially reduce their expenses. Rooms can always be procured at very reasonable rates.

Young people who design attending the Tecumseh schools next year can procure a new catalogue containing the full course of studies and other necessary information, by applying to Prof. Hammond or to any member of the School Board.

Adrian Times of yesterday: The lightning yesterday afternoon paid an unwelcome visit at the telephone exchange. Connections from the street wires with the switchboard and annunciator are made with very fine magnetic wire, and this fine wire was burned from some twenty annunciators. It also melted the paraffine insulation around the wires in some of the hand phones. The damage is more annoying than expensive, and telephonic communication has been somewhat hindered to-day.

Kellogg's Columbian Oil is a powerful remedy. Taken externally and internally in the most severe cases of colic, cramping pains, cholera morbus, flux, diarrhoea, etc., it allays all inflammation and does not produce constipation.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Geo. C. Clarke, of Port Dalhousie, Ontario, states that she had been confined to her room for a long time with that dreadful disease, Consumption. The doctors said she could not escape an early grave, but fortunately she began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and in a short time was completely cured. Doubting ones, please write Mrs. Clarke, and be convinced. Sold by all druggists.

Morenci Observer: Seneca now has the oldest person in Lenawee county, if not in the State, as the venerable Mrs. Powell, if she survives until September next, will be one hundred and three years old. Although physically very feeble, she still retains a vivid recollection of many of the scenes and incidents of her youthful days.

The Marquette Mining Journal exhibits in gross tons the total lake shipments of iron ore from the upper peninsula ports for the present season, up to and including July 12, which amounted to 1,161,148 tons, against 727,185 in 1881—an increase of 433,963 tons over the corresponding period of 1881.

The Dominion Cattle company, of Canada, has now invested nearly $700,000 in lands and cattle in the pan-handle of Texas. [illegible] purchasing the Wolf Creek cattle ranch of 18,000 cattle and 400 horses and mules, with all the personal property belonging to the ranch, for the sum of $450,000. This property adjoins the Word ranch, containing 11,500 cattle, just previously purchased by the Dominion company, thus uniting the two ranches, which combined are capable of carrying 50,000 cattle, making it the most valuable property in the pan-handle.

The census office has issued a bulletin showing that by the census of 1880 the number of persons in the United States was 50,155,783; the area in square miles, 2,900,170; the number of families, 9,945,916; the number of dwellings, 8,955,812; the number of persons to a square mile, 17.29; the number of families to a square mile, 3.43; the number of dwellings to the square mile, 3.02; acres to a person, 37.01; acres to a family, 186.62; persons to a dwelling, 5.60; and persons to a family, 5.04. The area in land is surface only, and, exclusive of the Indian Territory and tracts of unorganized territory, aggregating 69,830 square miles.

One of the neatest bits of tit for tat that we have heard for many a day occurred on the Southern Pacific train the other morning. A certain lawyer of this city, well known for his powers of repartee, had been down to Salina to try a case. Returning to town the conductor, one of the new swaggering set imported from the East, was very impertinent in his manner because the lawyer was rather tardy in producing his ticket, when called for to be punched for about the twentieth time. Somewhat ruffled, the lawyer remarked to a friend next to him, "The Southern Pacific shall never see a cent of my money after this." "Going to foot it up and down from now on, eh?" sneered the conductor. "Oh, no," replied the lawyer quietly; "instead of buying my ticket at the office I shall pay my fare to you." —San Francisco News Letter.

The youngest pensioner of the Government is James W. Crandell, age 15, who lives with his widowed mother in Philadelphia. A year ago last March he enlisted in the navy, and soon afterward was sent to Southern waters on the Constitution. A fortnight later he was stricken with typhoid fever, which left him stone deaf. The surgeon thought he was shamming to secure a discharge, and to test his hearing placed him between two of the largest guns, which were then simultaneously discharged. He stood like a statue, whereas the officers expected to see him jump like a roebuck. He felt the deck tremble, but heard nothing. He draws $13 a month. His brother John, age 17, who fell from one of the yards of the Constitution and broke his arm, has just applied for a pension.

They tell of a young lady in Rome, Ga., who carried a snake in her hat all one afternoon, and was unconscious of its presence. The young man who carries a brick in his hat in this latitude, however, is sure to let his friends know all about it.

Ancient Sicilian Quarries.

The objects which will most surprise and delight the visitor to Syracuse are the ancient quarries, called Latomiæ, perpendicular excavations of 100 feet or more in the solid rock of the plateau, out of which the stone was taken to build the city. The principal are the Latomia del Paradiso, the Cappuccini, the Casale, and the St. Venere. These vary in extent and in beauty, but all have the same general character. The larger have an area of several acres. When you descend into one of them you find yourself in the most luxuriant and sweet-smelling garden you can imagine. The high and evenly-cut walls are hung with ivy, which spreads in great masses of green from gigantic stems. The rich soil of the bottom makes to flourish the orange and the lemon and a wilderness of graceful plants and ever-blooming flowers. The air is vocal with the songs of birds. Out of this paradise of scenes and color, one looks up to a sky as blue as sapphire. The excavations are irregular. Here a single column of rock has been left by the quarryman; here a passage has been opened into another enormous apartment, vaster and more impressive than any cathedral. Here the rock has been cut under, and we are in a vast vaulted chamber, the ceiling of which has acquired by some chemical change a pink tinge, as if it had been decorated for a ball room. Indeed, a superb ball was given not many years ago in one of these cyclop chambers.

These ancient quarries have been used in past times for various purposes, for prisons and for burial-places, before they were turned into gardens. In the largest, the Cappuccini, it is supposed that the 7,000 captive Athenians were confined in 413 B. C., until they perished of alternate cold and heat, and thirst and hunger. It was then a horrible pit of death, impossible to be conceived from its present smiling aspect. Of the 7,000, the few survivors were sold as slaves, although it is said that all those were set at liberty who could recite the verses of Euripides.

The Paradiso is more wild and gloomy than the other querries, although not so beautiful, but it is more famous, because it contains the "Ear of Dionysius." This ear is one of the historic frauds. The story was that Dionysius had the rock hewn in the form of an ear, so that by stationing himself in a proper place he could hear what the prisoners below said, and enjoy their lamentations. There is a winding and lofty excavation in one part of the quarry not unlike the passage of a giant ear, and from above there is a gallery leading down to a small chamber communicating with it. It is evident, however, that in making this singular carved hall the quarrymen were only following a particular vein of stone. The grotto has extraordinary acoustic properties. A whisper made at the entrance can be heard in the remote chamber above, and the cavern gives back the most remarkable echoes and reverberations. The slamming of the wooden door at the entrance produces a sound resembling thunder or the discharge of artillery, and the tearing of a bit of paper at the same place sounds like the crack of a revolver. It was Caravaggio, who was down this way in the sixteenth century to execute some sacred pictures for the churches, who named this grotto the Ear of Dionysius.

Japanese Farm Life.

Something more than one-half the population of the empire, says Consul Van Buren, is agricultural, and the half of these are women. In 1874, 12,000,000 acres were under cultivation, or about three-fourths of an acre per head of the farming population; but the tillage is most thorough, and two crops are invariably raised each year. All farm labor is hard labor. A plow is seldom seen, and labor-saving machines are unknown. Wages for farm labor seem low; thirty-five dollars a year with board, or fifty dollars without board, for a man, and ten dollars with board and twenty-five to thirty dollars without it for a woman; and then, as the clothing for a laborer costs but four or five dollars a year, and he gets a three-room (bamboo and paper) house for eight or ten dollars a year, and clothing for a family of four or five costs not to exceed twenty dollars, and his garden will produce one-half of his living, the farm laborer is not in a desperate condition, and being exceedingly frugal, he manages to lay up something every year. Yet the Japanese farmers are prosperous. Nearly all can read, write, and keep farm accounts, while the boys are sent to school and the girls taught music and needlework at home, and there is not a house, not even among the Coolies or laborers, that does not have its bath-room, which is put in use every morning.

A Long Walk.

It is said that Mr. Arkins, of Denver, was one of the men who recently went on the excursion to Pueblo. When he reached that place he went to spend the evening with an old friend of his, and they had a grand time together. At 11 o'clock Mr. Arkins suddenly remembered that he had neglected to send a special to his paper, and, excusing himself for a moment, he left the house to attend to the matter. On his way out he struck a path leading around a circular flower-bed, and kept tramping away in a happy state of mind until his aching legs and the dawn of day brought him into a realizing sense of his condition. He had traveled around the flower-bed all night, and at the least calculation had covered some sixty miles. And yet he insists that he was perfectly sober.—Laramie Boomerang.

The Doctor's Opinion.

"Oh, doctor do you think my little darling will live?" inquired an anxious mother of the family physician who had called the seventh time with his bill.

"Live! Why there isn't anything the matter with him is there?"

"Well, no, not now; but you know, doctor, there are so many children's diseases around."

"Huh! If the child takes after his father, he'll live where an honest man will starve to death. Good morning."

Because you look down on a man, it does not make it incumbent on him to look up to you.

Gas Tar for Insects.

For the last five years I have not lost a cucumber or melon vine, or cabbage plant, says a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. Get a barrel with a few gallons of gas tar in it; pour water on the tar; always have it ready when needed, and when the bugs appear give them a liberal drink of the tar water from a sprinkler, or otherwise, and if the rain washes it off and they return, repeat the dose. It will also destroy the Colorado potato beetle, and frighten the old long potato-bug worse than a threshing with a brush. Five years ago this summer, both kinds appeared on my late potatoes, and were watered with the tar-water. The next day all Colorados that had not been well protected from the sprinkling were dead, and the others, though their name was legion, were all gone, and I have never seen one of them on the farm since.

The New Discovery.

Dr. Deming's Pile Ointment, the discovery of a physician of wide reputation, who has achieved the greatest success, the most conspicuous distinction, and the highest honors in his profession, is a sure cure for blind, bleeding, itching and ulcerated piles. Nine Physicians Outdone.

It is generally considered a greatly difficult task to outdo a physician, but the following will conclusively prove where nine were completely outdone. Mrs. Helen Pharviz, 331 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill., was treated for Consumption by nine physicians, and all pronounced her case incurable. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption completely cured her. Doubting ones, please drop her a postal card and convince yourselves. Sold by all druggists.

Don't Be Silly.

Don't let a foolish prejudice against popular medicines stand between you and the health of your wife, child, or baby. It is always right to advertise a blessing. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is a blessing. It has saved thousands and it will help you. If you are sick and miserable, we advise you to spend One Dollar for this medicine, and then write to the Doctor, at Roudout, N. Y., as to how you feel.—For troubles of the Kidneys, Bowels, Liver, and Blood it has no equal.

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within. Its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can it be cured ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that

95 Per Cent.

of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. RANSOM'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SELECT LIST OF LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

An advertiser who spends upwards of $5,000 a year, and who invested less than $350 of it in this List, writes: "Your Select Local List paid me better last year THAN ALL THE OTHER ADVERTISING I DID."

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.

IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population, and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. A PLEASANT LETTER.

It Rings of a Grateful Heart and Gives Honor Where Honor is Due.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced everything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote and says: "I have had no pain for six months and I have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you Derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder, associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices Medicine and Surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. Epping Forest.

One May 6 the 5,600 acres of land to the northeast of London, known as Epping Forest, was declared free to the public. The value of this immense tract of land, from a scientific point of view, lies, says Nature, in its wildness. By far the greater portion is primitive woodland, which has been but little interfered with by man in comparison with the heaths and commons to the north, west and south of London. Such an expanse requires little in the way of "improvement." The requirements of the ordinary holiday-maker and of the field naturalist are in this case identical. To be able to roam through many miles of wild forest is as truly a pleasure and novelty to the former as it is a necessity to the latter.

But in addition to the forest proper there are open spaces amounting to more than 2,000 acres, and the best mode of improving these is now under discussion. One of the most unique suggestions thus far made was that of Mr. Alfred R. Wallace in a recent number of the Fortnightly Review. After providing for play-grounds, etc., Mr. Wallace would plant these spaces in such a way as to give a fair representation of typical landscapes in various parts of the world. Thus for instance, by planting a section with hickories, sassafras, liquidamber, maples, oaks, rhododendrons, catalpas, magnolias, locusts, tulip trees, butternut, bald cypress, Virginia creeper, hemlock, spruce, kalmias and other American trees and shrubs, he would produce a North American landscape. So again, by the use of the California big trees, redwoods, pines, spruces, cypresses, silver firs, gigantic arbor-vitæs, and other growths found west of the Rocky Mountains, he would imitate a landscape on the Pacific slope.

In like manner another section could be devoted to the trees of Europe and Western Asia, including such examples as the nettle tree, the red bud, the flowering ash, the wild olive, the hop hornbeam, Nordman's Russian silver fir, and the picea pinsapo of Spain; another to the singular vegetation found on the eastern shore of Asia, as the ailantus, the sophora, cryptomeria, paulownia, the retinosporas, the ginko tree, the Chinese arbor vitæ, the wistaria, and the glyptostrobus; while one landscape might be devoted to trees and shrubs peculiar to the Southern hemisphere, including such specimens as the Chilian pine, the gum tree of Australia, the huon pine of Tasmania, the pittosporums of New Zealand, and many charming shrubs and climbers from Brazil.

Odd Bits of Ignorance.

In spite of the advance of education, everyone who has observed his fellow-creatures must be aware that even the educated classes are grotesquely ignorant. We have known a clergyman, and a University man, to boot, and a grave fellow, too, and a pious, who, when he visited the Riviera, expressed peculiar interest in the prospect of viewing Nice. "Here," said he, "was held the famous Council of Nice, and in the presence of that blue sea, within the shade of those gray groves of olives, was composed one of the creeds of the church." This was doubtless a sentence from some future sermon; but we regret to say that, in a thoughtless moment, and obeying a pedantic impulse, we dispelled the illusion and demonstrated that the Council of Nice was not held in the fascinating neighborhood of Monte Carlo.

It is not every one who has heard of Mr. Darwin. At his recent funeral a distinguished naturalist, fond of conversation, began to chat with a high official of the police force who was helping people to move on in an orderly manner. "Ah, sir," said the inspector, "we have lost a great man—Darwin, the Laureate poet."

The public is peculiarly ignorant of Bible history. We doubt if a fair percentage of the people you meet in the course of an hour's walk could get as near the order of the names of the books in the Old Testament as the little school-girl in Somerset. This West-country blossom of the School-Board system was requested to name the earlier writings of the sacred text, which she did thus, and very fluently: "Devonshire, Exeter, Liticus, Numbers, Astronomy, Jupiter, Jumbo, Ruth." Here the higher criticism dimly detects a vague local rendering of "Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth." Talking of Ruth reminds us of the ignorant lady at the picture gallery. "Ruth and Boaz," she read in the catalogue; "who was Ruth?" Whereupon her companion favored her with a sketch of the plot of Mrs. Gaskell's Ruth, ending with the confession, "but I don't remember who Boaz was." An American lady was heard to ask in the Pitti galleries, "Who is that by?" The answer was "Rayphael." "Is he the same as Rayphael Sanzio?" "No; don't you know there are three of them, Raypheal, Sanzio and Urbino."

How Birds Learn to Sing.

A wren built her nest in a box on a New Jersey farm. The occupants of the farm house saw the mother teach her young to sing. She sat in front of them and sang her whole song very distinctly. One of the young attempted to imitate her. After proceeding through a few notes its voice broke and it lost the tune. The mother immediately recommenced where the young one had failed, and went very distinctly through with the remainder. The young bird made a second attempt, commencing where it had ceased before, and continuing the song as long as it was able; and when the note was again lost the mother began anew where it had stopped, and completed it. Then the young one resumed the tune, and finished it. This done, the mother sang over the whole series of notes a second time with great precision, and a second of the young attempted to follow her. The wren pursued the same course with this one as with the first; and so with the third and fourth. This was repeated day after day and several times a day, until each of the birds became a perfect songster.—Holden's Bird Magazine.

"What is that man charged with?" asked the Russian police justice. "With dynamite, your honor, answered the prosecuting attorney.

A Mansion in Pompeii.

One enters through a long vestibule, on each side of which are several shops, not connected with the house. From the vestibule, with its mosaic pavement, one is admitted into a large, square place, called the atrium, which has a roof over it, with a square hole about eight feet in the center. In the floor, under the hole, is a square marble basin, of the same size, called the impluvium. It has on one side a pretty marble fountain, and water was always playing in the basin; besides, during a rain, the water also dripped into the impluvium. This atrium formed the chief source of light to the front portion of the house, as they never had windows opening on the street.

On each side of the atrium are two or three little rooms not more than six feet square. The walls are covered with frescoes, and the floors are of fine mosaics. The ceiling, which has all fallen in, was of stone, built on the principle of the arch, and covered with stucco and frescoes. It seemed queer that they should have such small bedrooms, but the Pompeians seemed to care little about their sleeping apartments, as they passed the most of their time in the forum or larger rooms of their own house. The room contained a bed, and that seemed to be all. The walls, against which the beds were placed, are cut away a little, thus allowing the bed to be a little longer than the room. These bed-rooms each had a door, with a grating over it, to admit the light from the atrium. The sockets in which the doors swing are still to be seen in the marble threshold.

Back of the atrium is a large, square room separating it from the peristilum, called the tablinum. It has mosaic pavement and fine frescoes on the walls. The use of this room was to receive people who had business with the owner. On each side of the atrium, next to the sleeping-rooms, are two wings or ala, also with mosaics and frescoes. Back of the tablinum is the peristilum, a covered court similar to the atrium, only that the roof is supported by tall columns. A marble basin is in the center. Around this peristilum are small bed-rooms also, and on one side, through a small passage, is the kitchen, a small yet well-arranged apartment. The most prominent objects are the two large serpents painted on the walls, as the serpent is the protector of the cooking department.

The stoves were always of brick, and had several small places for charcoal, over which the kettles were placed. In the lower part is a place to store the coal. On the opposite side of the room is a brick sink. Going back through the passage, we go into the peristilum again and through a room at the back of the peristilum, similar to the tablinum, arriving in a large court surrounded by columns so as to form a portico. In the center of this garden were trees and plants, as has been proved by means of the carbonized roots of vegetable matter. The entire building has walls on every side, and the only entrance is through the front door. Such a building is but an example of an ordinary dwelling house.

Fashion Notes.

White muslin dresses are embroidered all over both bodice and skirt.

Redingotes require the broad-brimmed Directoire hats to be in keeping.

Laces, dyed in all the fashionable shades of colors, are seen upon costly imported bonnets and round hats.

Pink is a color that promises to rage this season in every grade of dress goods. There are so many shades of this popular hue that every taste can be studied.

For evening, feather tips arranged in the hair and upon the corsage, fastened in place by diamond pins or brooches, are worn with full-dress toilets.

Crinoline grows in favor with English women, but meets with no success with Parisians. American ladies content themselves with very small tournures.

"Crushed-strawberry" red and raspberry pink are the fashionable colors for the gingham dresses worn by brunettes. They are trimmed with white embroidered muslin.

The turban-shaped toque is essentially the traveling hat of the season. It is very often made of the material matching the dress, or of fine straw, trimmed simply with a twisted scarf of figured surah, or bright-colored pheasant's feathers, laid smoothly over the crown.

For tall and slender young ladies is the new French mantelet cut in exceedingly graceful curves, and trimmed around with a feathery ruche bordering of fringed silk. These wraps are made of black brocaded gauze, the figures being of raised flowers of velvet or chenille.

For elegance, economy, and variety, no dress will so certainly combine these excellent qualities as one of velvet, made walking length, with close-fitting bodice, and plain, ruche-trimmed skirt. This rich dress is a foundation for many changes, and the coming Summer velvet skirts will be worn throughout the season, with over-dresses, tunics and bodices, coat basques and panniers, made of every description of goods, from the daintiest-tinted India mull to the richest of satin and brocade. Skirts are now made of the new English brand of velveteen, which it is almost impossible to distinguish from real silk velvet. This new fabric is as far removed from the tawdry velveteen of days past as the old cotton laces are from the exquisitely-wrought patterns of to-day.

French Bird Dealers.

On the quay, not far from Notre Dame, Paris, is a bird market. A large space is divided off into stalls, and the stalls are full of cages. There are thousands upon thousands of beautiful birds, and hundreds of buyers. The birds are hardy little creatures, for when a prospective purchaser wishes to look at one, the woman in charge opens the cage door, catches the bird and shows it off, pulling out its wings and so on, the bird meanwhile appearing used to the operation. Then, if it is not purchased, she puts it back in the cage, and it hops off as gayly as ever. If the bird is bought, she puts it into a paper bag, just gathering the top loosely.

An old adobe building at San Antonio, Texas, over 150 years old, is being pulled down to make room for a modern structure. It was built by settlers from the Canary Islands in 1730. Many of the timbers, which are cedar wood, are good yet.

An old Scotchman attributes the disappearance of ghosts from the Scottish moors to the custom of tea-drinking at social meetings. It requires Scotch whisky on the top of old ale to enable a man to see a ghost really worth talking about.

Prince Charles, of Germany, brother of the Emperor, consumes daily from eighteen to twenty-four strong Havana cigars. He smokes three at a time, in a triple-barreled holder, made according to his own design.

Bavaria sent us 780,000 corsets last year, and expects to double that number the present year. Bavarian corsets, by the way, are the most shapely and graceful of any imported, and cramp the human form divine of many of our beautiful women.

About 250,000 pounds of fish are sold in New York daily. Of this quantity about 65 per cent. goes out of the city. If, as is said, fish is food for the brain, New Yorkers must be the brainiest people on earth.

Smuggling on a large scale is said to be going on at Quebec. It is charged that a large quantity of spirits was successfully landed from a ship at one of the wharves near the custom house, a few nights since, and concealed in a building in lower town.

A family of negroes living in the bend of the river, a short distance from Shubuta, Miss., placed their infant in the care of some children, among them a girl of some size. It seems they went into the woods to play, and becoming tired of the baby, and wishing to rid themselves of its demands for attention, broke its neck with sticks, and threw the body into a slough near by. When they returned home, later, the child was inquired for, and several conflicting stories were told, which led to suspicion. The larger girl was taken out, and by means of threats to shoot or beat her to death, was forced to a confession.

According to the Court Journal, an edict has gone forth to lower the net in lawn-tennis, and that for the future, in single matches, the correct height of the net will be three feet six inches at the post and three feet at the centre.

The Cost of It.

If the total cost of sickness simply in its business aspects were reckoned up, it would be found to be great enough in five years to pay the national debt. The merchant has a headache, from a fit of indigestion, and misses a good bargain. The lawyer does the same with a case. To say nothing about doctor's fees, etc., it don't pay to be even a little sick. Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is a friend of the business man, for it clears his brain. In the French chamber of deputies, De Freycinet proposed that France occupy the ends of the Suez canal with four thousand men, and stated that the ministry was unanimous in making a direct appeal to the confidence of the chamber. By a vote of 450 to 75 the credit demanded by the government was rejected. The ministers proceeded to the Elysee and tendered their resignations to President Grevy, who requested them to transact all necessary business until the appointment of their successors.

Arabi Pasha sent out a force of six hundred men, late on Tuesday evening, to surprise the British outposts at Alexandria, but the attempt was defeated by the 38th regiment. The Egyptian garrison at Aboukir, comprising two thousand men, declared their loyalty to the khedive, who sent a vessel to take them on board and land a party to spike the guns. The center of the great square at Alexandria is being filled with cafes and booths, and retail trade is reviving. A force of 250 British rifles surrounded the village of Carmuss, and seized several cart-loads of booty. De Lesseps prevented a general debarkation from the war vessels, and made the new governor guarantee the safety of Europeans. The British have mined the railway embankment at Ramleh, to guard against a night attack. The khedive can not be induced to offer amnesty to the chief rebel officers, to induce them to desert Arabi Pasha. The latter has telegraphed to Constantinople a protest against the dispatch of Turkish troops.

Two expeditions which left Alexan[illegible] rebels were completely successful. Houses just outside the British lines at Ramleh are still being plundered, and one culprit was killed by the patrols. The Scots guards embarked at London on the transport Orient, in presence of the prince and princess of Wales. The British ambassador at Constantinople has again requested the sultan to issue a proclamation denouncing Arabi Pasha as a rebel, but received no satisfaction. The absence of Onou, the Russian representative, from the session of the international conference on Thursday alone prevented a satisfactory arrangement of difficulties. At a council of 364 leading Egyptians it was resolved that Arabi Pasha should defend the country until the conclusion of peace. The French men-of-war have been ordered to Port Said, and Admiral Conrad has received instructions to maintain strict neutrality. Admiral Seymour went on the Helicon to Aboukir for a reconnoissance, and found work in progress at the forts, which are well armed. The admiral has been ordered to establish a censorship on cable messages.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JULY 24.—The senate passed a bill to refund to the heirs of John W. Forney $27,684 paid by him to cover the defalcation of a clerk in his office when he was secretary of the senate. Mr. Allison presented the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill, announcing disagreements on the proposition to transfer the surgeon general's records and on the distribution of rooms in the new building for the state, war and navy departments, and a new conference was ordered. The revenue bill was taken up, the pending amendment providing for the reduction of the tobacco tax to eight cents per pound. Mr. Sherman said that this scheme would cut off $21,000,000 of revenue. The amendment was rejected by 18 to 38. An amendment by Mr. Mahone was adopted, for a rebate on all unbroken factory packages of cigars and cigarettes. A motion for an evening session was voted down.

JULY 25.—The senate wasted an hour in a debate on printing the census reports. The conference report on the river and harbor bill was adopted. The revenue bill came up, the question being on Mr. Hale's amendment to the sugar duty, striking off the latest addition of 25 per cent., which was adopted. Mr. Harris moved to reduce duties on all imports 10 per cent. after January, and an equal amount at the commencement of the next year. After a discussion between Messrs. Vance and Hoar, an adjournment was carried by 27 to 26.

JULY 26.—In the senate, Mr. Conger made a favorable report on the Deuster bill to regulate the carrying of passengers by sea. Mr. Hale secured the postponement of the revenue bill, and the senate went into committee of the whole on the naval appropriation. Mr. Hale showed that with 39 steam vessels in active service the American navy has over 1,400 commissioned officers while the British navy, which has over 900 men-of-war, has but 2,700 officers. Mr. Cameron moved to recommit the bill to the appropriation committee, with instructions to eliminate all provisions in regard to the organization of the navy. Mr. Hale stated that out of a force of 23 commodores only one was doing actual sea duty. The bill went over without action. Mr. George had read a telegram from the state board of health of Mississippi, praying for an appropriation for the national board of health.

JULY 27.—In the senate, Mr. Williams offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill to allow Charles H. Reed not exceeding $5,000 for his services in defending Guiteau, the attorney general to fix the amount. The naval appropriation bill was taken up. After a long debate, the motion by Mr. Cameron to recommit the measure with instructions to eliminate all general legislation was defeated by 20 to 34. This proved an exhausting day's work, and the measure was flung aside without action. A new conference on the Japanese indemnity bill was ordered.

JULY 28.—The senate passed the house bill in regard to the pay of letter-carriers and the senate measure to provide for the publication of the tenth census. The naval appropriation bill was taken up. The committee amendment dividing into three classes the 149 surgeons on the active list was ruled out of order, and the senate sustained the decision by 26 to 21. After an explanation by Mr. Allison, the house provision as to the number and promotion of lieutenants was restored. The amendment dispensing with civil employes at navy-yards was agreed to. Mr. Beck gave notice of an amendment to reduce the item for completing the Miantonomah and launching other monitors from $1,000,000 to $400,000. Mr. Logan announced his purpose to offer an amendment abolishing prize-money. The house joint resolution extending the appropriations to August 3 was passed.

JULY 29.—The senate passed house bills to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea and to pay the widow of Minister Garnet an amount equal to his salary for one year. Consideration of the naval appropriation bill was then resumed. An amendment by Mr. Beck was adopted, reducing to $400,000 the item for completing the Miantonomah and launching the other four monitors. The clause abolishing the grade of commodore was struck out, as was also the provision for the condemnation and sale of unserviceable stores belonging to the several bureaus of the navy. It was resolved that a vote on the bill shall be taken at 3 p. m. on Monday.

HOUSE.

JULY 24.—In the house, the views of the minority of the judiciary committee on the subject of the Northern Pacific land grant were presented by Messrs. Payson and Knott, and they were ordered printed and laid on the table. Mr. Cannon submitted a conference report on the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, agreeing to all the items except that for the transfer of records from the surgeon general's office to the adjutant general's archives, and a further conference was ordered. Bills were referred, to collect from the Kansas Pacific Railroad company the cost of surveying and conveying certain lands; to declare forfeit lands granted the Northern Pacific company and still remaining unpatented, and fixing the duty on imported hay at 20 per cent. ad valorem. Mr. Flower proposed a constitutional amendment granting the president the right to veto any distinct item of a bill. Mr. Atkins introduced a bill to allow no claim or account against the United States unless it be filed within six years from the passage of this act.

JULY 26.—The house was entertained by Mr. Miller, of Pennsylvania, who seems to have discovered that he was recently assailed by Mr. Butler in the senate chamber. The regular order of business was the bill to allow drawback on imported material used in the construction of vessels for foreign account, which was recommitted. Mr. Washburn offered a resolution for a naval court of inquiry to investigate the loss of the Jeannette. A resolution was adopted to print 300,000 copies of the agricultural report. Mr. Page explained the conference report on the river and harbor bill, to which the house refused to agree by a vote of 82 to 97, and then adjourned.

JULY 28.—The house conferees still refuse to consent to the clause in the general deficiency appropriation for the payment of mileage to senators for the extra session. On reconsideration of the conference report on the river and harbor bill the house yielded, by 111 to 82. Mr. Pound secured the passage of a bill providing that in all suits for trespass on public lands the actual expense of survey or estimate shall be included in the bill of costs. A joint resolution was passed to authorize the loan of tents to Russian refugees in Foote Co., Kansas. An act to incorporate the Oregon Short-Line railway in Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming was passed. A joint resolution was adopted to pay to the widows of Minister Hurlbut, Kilpatrick, and Garnet an amount equal to one year's salary. A senate bill for the sale of part of the Omaha reservation in Nebraska is before the house.

JULY 27.—The house passed a bill to place Chicago among the classified posts, making the salary of the customs collector $7,000 per annum, and allowing a naval officer and surveyor. Mr. Kasson reported back the bill to make the duty on imported hay 20 per cent. ad valorem. A joint resolution was passed appropriating $1,000 for memorial cards to accompany the address of the life of President Garfield. A senate bill was passed granting to the St. Louis and San Francisco road the right of way through Choctaw and Chickasaw lands, an amendment to secure the consent of the Indians being lost. Mr. Williams reported a disagreement in the conference committee on the Japanese indemnity bill, and a further attempt to arrange the issue was ordered. In accordance with the request of the committee on foreign affairs, the resolution calling for the instructions to Admiral Nicholson at Alexandria was tabled. Mr. McKenzie made a vain attempt to secure an appropriation for a public building at Owensboro, K. A proposition to adjourn to Monday received but few votes.

DIED.

AYERS—At the residence of her son-in-law, J. W. Ayers, in this village, on Sunday evening, July 23, 1882, Mrs. Sarah Collar.

One year and a-half ago she broke her thigh bone and never rallied from the injury and for the few weeks preceding her death was a great and patient sufferer. She was born in February, 1800, and removed to Michigan and located in Macon in 1836. She was a widow fifteen years. We greatly beloved by her children and was devotedly cared for by them in her last illness. She united with the M. E. church in Macon in 1840, and remained a consistent member until her death. A large number of people attended the funeral services which were conducted by Rev. R. S. Parker, [illegible] esteem in which she was held. Her end was peaceful. Our loss is her infinite gain.

He was born at Natick, Mass., 1808, and had he lived until the 16th of this month would have been 76 years of age. Nearly 42 years he has passed in pleasant companionship of married life with the one who mourns his loss to-day. Five children blessed his home and have grown up to respected manhood and womanhood. For 27 years he has resided in this village, and in the relations of husband, father, friend, citizen and christian he fulfilled with patience, fortitude and sincerity, the responsible duties of those stations in life.

He was a charter member of the Universalist church, and a deacon in the same, from its foundation in this village. Rarely was he absent from his accustomed seat, and while zealous for this branch of the christian church, was equally tolerant and charitable to all. By his sudden death his family, society and the church, feel a great loss, but they are consoled by the comfortable assurance of the christian faith, and do not mourn as without hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Yea, saith the spirit, for their works do follow them."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

FRANKLIN.

Springville band will meet at the Center next Saturday evening.

Hud. Robinson, of Reading, formerly of Franklin, is visiting friends here.

Your correspondent had a pleasant trip to Devil's lake last Friday.

Arthur Dibble and sister, Mrs. Reuben Langdon, started for Petoskey and other northern points last week.

A rousing picnic is being agitated to take place at Devils lake in the near future by the young people of this vicinity.

Lon Peters is building a snug little barn at the Centre this week.

An ice cream festival and lawn social took place at the M. E. parsonage last Wednesday afternoon and evening.

About one-third of the wheat crop in this town is unsecured and is growing in the shock. Oats are badly lodged. The cool weather Wednesday makes the farmers feel more cheerful.

A meeting of the board of school inspectors will take place at Tuttle's hall, Aug. 16th, to take into consideration a change of boundaries in Districts No. 1, 2, and 4.

Clara W. Sheffield, of Adrian township, will have charge of the school in Dist. No. 3 this fall. Miss S. comes well recommended, and we predict a pleasant and profitable school.

An effort is being made which in all probability will prove successful to secure the services of Prof. Lowry as pastor of the Congregational church.

Married, at the M. E. parsonage, Sunday evening, Aug. 6, by Rev. A. W. Wilson, John Hill and Miss Eva Wilson, of Clinton.

Oscar Alexander has completed an additional barn, at an expense of $1,200, which for commodity and neatness in appearance ranks among the first of the town. It is 36x60 with 20 foot posts, and basement below for stabling [illegible] cows, and sheltering seventy-five sheep. There are a granary and two large bays above now well filled with hay and golden grain. Philip Pentecost and Christopher Pawson did the carpenter work and Frank D. Jenkins put on the points of beauty with his brush.

SPRINGVILLE.

A good looking girl is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Feller for a few years.

The ice cream and lawn social given by Mrs. A. G. Evans, at Brooklyn, on Saturday eve., July 29th, for the benefit of the Springville cornet band, was a grand success and netted the boys just $25.

Harvest dance at the Springville hotel on Friday eve., Aug. 18th.

The frequent rains has damaged wheat that was out badly, and laid oats in all directions.

RIDGEWAY.

The author of the telephone article in last week's Herald should have said Mr. W. of Raisin, instead of Mr. W. of Ridgeway. Please give us a rest.

The Republican township convention will be held at the village on Wednesday evening, Aug. 16, to elect six delegates to the County Convention to be held on the 21st inst. at Adrian.

The ice cream social at G. W. Jackson's last Friday evening was well attended even though the weather was quite unfavorable.

In spite of the inclemency of the weather, the young people of Ridgeway to the number of about twenty, accepted an invitation to the home of Mr. Charles Underwood on Thursday evening, of last week. All enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent listening to the entertaining music furnished. Mr. Underwood expects to retire about the last of September, from the active duties of the farm and move to the village, where we hope they will make a permanent residence.

Nearly everybody was surprised on Wednesday afternoon to learn that a well known gentleman and lady had sought the assistance of our pastor to make their names read alike. The Elder succeeded finely, and now Miss Abbie Barrett will be known as Mrs. Frederick Fagan.

EAST RAISIN.

A Harvest festival will be held in John Richard's grove on Friday, Aug. 18th, commencing at 10:30 a. M. Picnic dinner at noon. Music by the Raisin Band, and other exercises suitable to such an occasion. A general invitation is extended to all.

Beware of Them.

A good article that has achieved success, and attained a world-wide reputation by its true merits and wonderful results, is always imitated. Such is the case with Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Already unprincipled parties are endeavoring to delude an unsuspecting public by offering imitations of this most fortunate discovery. Do not be deceived, but insist on having the true remedy, and take no other. For sale by all reliable druggists everywhere.

Burglars raided the house of ex-Congressman Bradley, at Saginaw city, a few nights ago. Mrs. Bradley was aroused, and taking a revolver went to her daughter's room and there found a man in the act of chloroforming the young lady. He made his escape.

An old man who is deaf and partially blind was run over by the cars at Albion last week and had one leg cut off. His name is Samuel Pryor.

The special committee upon revision of by-laws and ordinances reported as follows:

To the Honorable the Common Council of the Village of Tecumseh, Lenawee County, Michigan:

GREETING.—Your special committee upon revision of the by-laws and ordinances would respectfully report as follows:

We would recommend the following ordinances:

Be it ordained by the Common Council of the Village of Tecumseh, Lenawee County, Michigan this 7th day of August, A.D. 1882.

SEC. 1. That sections 6, 7, 8 and 9 of Chap. VIII, be and hereby are repealed, and that sections 5½ and 10 shall hereafter be respectfully numbered 6 and 7.

SEC. 2. That Chap. X be and hereby is repealed.

SEC. 3. That section 1 of Chap. XIV be and hereby is amended to read as follows: Sec. 1. It shall be the duty of the Marshal and deputies of said village, whenever, and as often as he shall know or be informed that any person is, or recently has been, drunken or intoxicated within said village, to immediately make or cause to be made before a Justice of the Peace of the township of Tecumseh, Lenawee county, a complaint of such intoxication or drunkeness according to section 24 of the act of incorporation of this village in 1859. That section 2 of said Chap. XIV be and hereby is amended by striking out the words "not exceeding five dollars and costs for each offense," and substituting therefor the words "of ten dollars and costs for each offense, or in default of payment thereof, by imprisonment according to Sec. 2 of Chap. XVI of these by-laws and ordinances."

SEC. 4. That an ordinance entitled "an ordinance to prohibit the running at large of swine in the village of Tecumseh," passed by the common council April 5th, 1859, be and is hereby repealed.

SEC. 5. That an ordinance entitled "an ordinance relative to dogs," [illegible] hereby is repealed.

SEC. 6. That an ordinance entitled "an ordinance relative to licensing produce buyers," passed May 10, 1869, be and hereby is repealed.

SEC. 7. That an ordinance entitled "an ordinance relative to licensing draymen," passed May 17, 1869, be and hereby is repealed.

Your committee would respectfully recommend that all amendatory ordinances relative to fire limits which are in their nature merely building permits be omitted from the contemplated revision.

Your committee would also report that after consultation with P. S. McKinnon he makes the following proposition:

To compile the by-laws and ordinances and index the same to date, without marginal notes for $20.00.

To compile and index the same with marginal notes to charter, $25.00.

To compile and index the same with marginal notes throughout, $35.00.

To compile same with annotated marginal notes, $50.00.

To be completed in reasonable time. Which estimates we recommend for your consideration.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

FRED B. WOOD, }
B. F. STEINHOFF, } Com.

On motion the report was accepted and adopted and the committee directed to have Mr. P. S. McKinnon proceed with the revision in accordance with his last estimate.

The President reported that he had completed the contract with Mr. W. E. Gray; also that the Telephone Co. had, at his request, donated one instrument to the Village, and that the same had been put in at the residence of engineer H. E. Stout.

A Cure for Diptheria.

A correspondent of a Victoria paper writes: "Should any of your family be attacked with diptheria, do not be alarmed, as it is speedily cured with- [illegible] England a few years ago, I accompanied Dr. Field on his rounds to witness the so called wonderful cures he performed while the patients of others were dropping off on all sides. The remedy to be so rapid, must be simple. All he took with him was powdered sulphur and a quill, and with those he cured every patient without exception. He put a teaspoonful of flour of brimstone into a wine-glass of water, and stirred it with his finger instead of a spoon, as the sulphur does not readily amalgamate with water. When the sulphur was well mixed he gave it as a gargle, and in ten minutes the patient was out of danger. Brimstone kills every species of fungus in man, beast, and plant, in a very few minutes. Instead of spitting out the gargle, he recommended the swallowing of it. In extreme cases in which he had been called, just in the nick of time, when the fungus was too nearly closing to allow the gargling, he blew the sulphur through a quill into the throat, and after the fungus had shrunk to allow of it, then the gargling. If the patient cannot gargle, take a live coal, put it on a shovel and sprinkle a spoonful or two of flour of brimstone upon it at a time; let the sufferer inhale it, holding the head over it, and the fungus will die, if plentifully used, the whole room may be filled to suffocation, and the patient can walk about in it, inhaling the fumes, with doors and windows closed. The smoke of fumigating the room with the sulphur has often cured most violent attacks of cold in the head, chest, etc, at any time, and is recommended in cases of consumption and asthma."—Cor. He Thought he was Boss.

BY H. L. CHARLES.

Joe Blade has lived single for thirty-one years,
But now he decided to take him a wife,
Which he did with all promptness, untroubled by fears,
Of a possible end to the peace of his life.

But soon he discovered that many loose ways,
Which in days of freedom had carelessly taken form,
Were displeasing to her who should brighten his days,
And must now be abandoned—else live in a storm.

He called on an old born companion one day—
Tom Wayne his name—and he told him his grief,
"That is nothing," said Tom, "for all wives have their say,
And the most of them freely express their belief.

"If you are in doubt that my statement is true,
We'll start out at once, and will give it a test.
We will call at each house and find out by some clew
If the wife has an influence over the rest.

"With every man we can find on the way
Whose wife has no influence, a cow I will leave,
If you will permit all those under her sway
The small gift of an egg from your hand to receive."

All day they labor, and many a man
Accepted his egg with a courteous bow;
But not one, when brought under the test of their plan,
Could be found who was worthy of taking a cow.

Their final attempt was made just before night,
Approaching a house, an old man they espied,
"I presume you are the owner," said Tom. "Am I all right?"
"Yes, stranger, I'm boss of this ranch," he replied.

"You're boss? So you're single, I take it," said Joe.
"No, indeed. I've been married for twenty-five years.
But, betwixt you and me, I would have you to know,
No woman can ever lead me by the ears."

Said Joe, "You're the man we've been seeking since morn;
See, here are two cows; come take which you please."
On examining them both he preferred the short horn,
But continued: "Just wait till I speak to Louise.

"My wife doesn't like the old short horn at all,"
He said on returning; "your pardon I beg;
But I'll now take the brindle, although she is small."
"No, you won't," says Tom Wayner, "Joe, give him his egg."

MARIE'S MISTAKE.

"Oh, what a delicious voice! Who is it, Marjorie, and where does it come from?" asked Marjorie Hare's early visitor, as they sat together chatting in the morning-room of the home of the former.

"It is Marie Moreau, the children's governess. She is such a pretty little thing, too, Edith! We are quite in love with her, and every day, after dinner, she sings for us until I am surprised she does not grow hoarse. Did you ever hear so perfect a voice? She might make her fortune on the stage. I wonder she is ever content, with such a gift, to teach children. I asked her once why she made such a choice. She blushed crimson, then grew pale, as she answered, in her fascinating accented English, 'I promised once, mademoiselle, and I keep my promise.' I am quite sure there is a hidden romance, somewhere; yet she is very young—scarcely of age, I should suppose."

"I must bring Frank to hear her. May we come in some evening?"

"Certainly, dear, to-night if you choose. We have no engagement, and Marie will sing for us, I am sure. But are you not afraid your brother may lose his heart? Although only a governess,' she is most bewitching, I assure you."

"I almost wish he would," answered Miss Ferrol, laughing. "But except for music, I sometimes think Frank has no heart. By-the-way, Marjorie, on the subject of hearts, when do you expect Captain Ellis? Is he coming for the holidays?"

It was at this moment the portiere was drawn aside, and a young girl, in the act of stepping into the room, suddenly paused.

Captain Ellis! Her lips grown pale, mutely repeated the question, while she stood motionless awaiting the reply, her presence all unnoticed by the two speakers.

It was now Marjorie's turn to blush.

"He is coming, if it is possible to obtain his furlough."

"And when am I to play bridesmaid, my dear?"

"We have not quite decided yet. Thornton pleads for then, but I say a year hence. I am so happy, I cannot bear to think of leaving home."

The portiere had dropped again, and the little figure who so unwittingly had been eavesdropping ran lightly through the wide hall and up the low, broad stairs to the pretty room she might call her own.

Here she paused, and, turning the key in the lock, stood upright, her hands tight pressed upon her madly-beating heart, her eyes dry and tearless, but flashing with light.

Full five minutes she remained motionless, then she crossed to her desk, and, opening it, took from one of its recesses a picture in a case.

A handsome, smiling face looked up, as she touched the spring which revealed it. The eyes, grey and eloquent, looked out at her as frankly and fearlessly as though no treachery were hidden in their depths; the lips, well-nigh concealed by the long, silken moustache, yet showed character and firmness, all lacking in deceit; the brow was clear and unfurrowed.

As the girl gazed, two great, unbidden tears suddenly blurred the portrait from her sight. She dashed them away with a gesture of pride and anger.

"I weep for him," she murmured, in her own liquid tongue—"for him who has forgotten me? Ah, I know now why I have not heard from him since I came to this house—why no reply has come to the letters I have sent him! How can I stay here? And she is my rival! She—young, rich, beautiful! I—ah, once he called me, too, beautiful! —I, too, am young. It is money, then, that I lack. I can have money, too. My promise binds me no longer; I break it. To-day I will write to Signor Luigi, and ask him if he again will offer me the terms I refused six months ago. Ah, it was cruel, when all was ready for my debut, that he whispered, 'Marie, I love you!' I have been a wild, careless fellow, and it will take six months to clear my debts. Then, my darling, you will marry me and share a soldier's life; but not all the money you could bring me would compensate to me for the knowledge that my wife had stood upon a public stage, subject alike to men's praise or criticism. Give up your ambition, child, even though in return I offer you the poor reward of a soldier's heart." And I obeyed you, Thornton, for this—only for this!"

* * * * * *

"Mademoiselle, will you sing for us this evening?" asked Miss Hare, as they came out from dinner into the lighted drawing-room. "I have some friends who are so anxious to hear you. But you are pale—you are not well."

"Oh, yes, I am quite well. I will sing with much pleasure."

"I told you Frank would lose his heart," whispered Marjorie, a little later, in Edith's ear, indicating, with a smile and a nod, the tall, handsome man who turned the music-leaves so assiduously, and listened with such rapt attention to the sweet, exquisitely-modulated voice.

But as the days went by, some doubt mingled with her former conviction.

What change had come over Marie? Marjorie wondered. Heretofore, it had been only with great effort she could induce her to meet strangers; now she seemed to seek diversion with a sort of feverish eagerness. The little French governess, of whom Marjorie in her sweet womanliness so gladly made a friend, actually had created quite a furore.

Her voice was something marvellous, the society world declared, and she was always so ready to assist in private concerts or charitable undertakings, that really she was—they said—most valuable.

So the world feted and courted, until, but for the long hours of study devoted to the children, Marie might readily have forgotten herself "only a governess." But in the midst of all this adulation, there was one whose homage was more real. Marjorie's words had proved prophetic.

For the first time in his thirty years, Frank Ferrol was in love; first with the voice and then with the woman. The world shrugged its shoulders somewhat at this. After all, the girl was poor and unknown, and he was a parti for whom mothers and maidens alike had schemed since his first coming of age.

It certainly was a most singular infatuation on his part, but it could not mean more than a flirtation.

But that it did mean more, none knew better than Frank himself. He was fairly bewitched. And so, one day, when he had found Marie alone in the music room, in a few burning, passionate words, he told her the story of his love, and asked her to be his wife.

"You think you love me, Mr. Ferrol?" she said. "For how long?"

"Ah, Marie!" he answered, "once loving you is to love always. Are you so ignorant of your power?"

"Your sex are fickle," she replied. "Are you unlike all the rest?"

"If to be faithful is unlike—yes. I love you! Ah, Marie, does my love waken no answer in your heart, that you stop thus to doubt and question?"

"My heart is dead!" she said, with sudden gravity. "Listen, Mr. Ferrol. A few weeks ago, I received from my old music-teacher an offer to go upon the stage. I have accepted it. My engagement begins in January, and binds me for a year. You see now why I cannot answer yes to your wooing."

"Break this engagement, Marie! If it is a money forfeit I will gladly meet it, no matter what the amount! Darling, your voice is too sacred to be heard because men pay for the privilege."

She smiled. Was the world all alike, she wondered?

"I cannot break it," she said, after a little pause. "I have given my word. Once before I broke my pledge, but I met my punishment."

"Was the temptation greater than that I offer you?" he asked.

"Hush!" she commanded, gently. "Let us not talk of it. It is past. And what is that line of the beautiful poem I was reading to the children? 'Let the dead past bury its dead.'"

"So be it, then, my darling. But the future, Marie; have you no thought for that—the future I prayed we might share together? Listen, child! If, indeed, you must do this thing—if you must go on the stage for one year—let me, at least, give you the shelter and protection of my name!"

The girl hesitated.

In two weeks she knew that Marjorie's fiancee would be here. How better could she meet him than as the betrothed of another man? He would never guess, then, the tears and kisses which had fallen daily on the handsome, pictured face which once had been—aye, which yet was—her heart's idol.

"I do not love you, Mr. Ferrol," she whispered, in a low, moved whisper. "Nor will I wear your proud old name before the public; but if, at the end of a year, you still care for the little French girl to whom you have been so generous, she will try and make you a good and faithful wife; and before then she will have learned to love you as you deserve."

And with this promise alone, Frank Ferrol was fain to be content.

But as the days slipped by, bringing nearer and nearer that appointment for Thornton Ellis' coming, the girl's heart grew faint and trembled.

How could she meet him? Surely it would be an unnecessary ordeal for both. She must plead preparation for her arrangements and leave before he came.

But when she urged her departure Marjorie was inexorable.

"You have forgotten the Christmas concert," she said. "No one can take your place. Ah, Marie, you will leave us soon. You must not go now. Besides, I want you to see and to know Thornton."

So, fate was stronger than she, and she could only pray for strength, and sit with folded hands waiting for his coming.

She was in her own room when she heard Marjorie's glad cry of welcome, and knew that her soldier lover had arrived. She did not go downstairs that night, pleading a headache—which indeed was truth, poor child!—for she had shed her last tears over the grave of her dead hopes until her eyes were swollen and her temples throbbed alike with grief and pain.

They still were too painful to permit her next day to rise for breakfast, and Marjorie, full of sympathy, brought with her own hands the tray with the cup of tea and delicately-cut toast upon it, making her swallow both. All the morning she lay quiet.

Late in the afternoon she rose, and stealing down into the music-room, idly touched the keys, letting her voice break into a plaintive little air, when suddenly a shadow darkened the threshold. A voice murmured her name. It was the voice which once had been to her ears sweeter than the sweetest music. She sat still and composed; but her hands were trembling, and the shadow fell the ashen pallor of her face.

"Marie!" he said, and with one stride was beside her. "How came you here?"

The question restored her courage.

"You did not know I was here?" she answered. "No. But fear nothing; I have not betrayed you."

"Betrayed me! Of what are you talking? For four months I have not heard from you a single line."

"I wrote you when I was ordered on special service. At any other time I should have received it as a high mark of favor, but I tried my best to shirk it, since it meant leaving you. I told you where to address me; begged you to write me by every mail. Not a letter reached me, and when, on my return, I went to your aunt's house, I found it inhabited by strangers, who could tell me nothing. Yet I come here by merest accident to find you."

"By merest accident!" answered the girl. "Perhaps Marjorie would object to your terms. You need not hesitate to speak plainly, Captain Ellis, though I must congratulate you on having received a step since we met. When we parted, it was Lieutenant Ellis. We may exchange confidences, since I, too, have learned the lesson of forgetfulness and am betrothed."

Dim as the light was, she saw his face pale. He staggered back, while behind them both stood a man, as if rooted to the floor—a listener unseen, unknown to them both.

"You betrothed?" he groaned. "Ah, Marie, through all these weary months my faith in you has never faltered. I have said to my heart, 'She may be dead, but she is true to me as I have been to her.' But—can it be possible? Marie, my cousin, Captain Ellis, is engaged to Marjorie Hare. Can it be that you have confounded him with me?"

"Your cousin! Captain Ellis!" she repeated, slowly. "But she called him Thornton?"

"Yes, it was a foolish idea to give us names alike; but, you see, we had a rich old uncle by that name, and both our mothers were determined we should stand equally in his favor. It's got poor Thornton into lots of trouble, since he had to shoulder all my boyish scrapes. But he got the old man's money, after all, so he can't complain; and he's been like a brother to me. But, little girl, tell me you didn't mean what you said just now?"

Tightly she pressed her hand against her heart.

"I—I meant it all!" she murmured. "Oh, Thornton, if you have ever loved me, go away and leave me! I—I am [illegible] then I am to be married."

"You are going on the stage? Your promise to me, Marie—did you forget that?"

"No; but I thought all was cancelled between us. I must go now. It would take a thousand pounds to forfeit my engagement. Neither you nor I have that amount."

"But Ellis would lend it to me. Oh, my darling! do you owe me nothing for all that I have suffered?"

"You forget that there is another engagement no money can release me from. I know now that I did very wrong, for the man is worthy of a good woman's all, and I can give him nothing but my worthless self. Go away, Thornton! I—I can bear the future better now, since I know I have only myself to blame. Go, Thornton—go."

"Yes, Marie, I will go; but only until to-morrow. We shall both be calmer then. We will find a way out of this cruel labyrinth."

He bent and took her in his arms. For a moment she lay there, unresisting. It was so sweet, so perilously sweet!

Then she faintly murmured, "Go!" and he obeyed her.

That night, a servant brought her a note. With trembling hand she broke the seal. It was very short, but it gave her back her freedom.

"I heard all," her lover wrote. "I know now why I could waken no response in the heart you told me was dead. You would have kept your word, Marie; but it would have been too cruel to us both. Child, I told you once to love you was to love you always. I knew my words true then; I know them true now. But my love will never wrong the man who calls you wife. Yet, dear, I ask but one last favor at your hands. I am rich; let my money buy you some little happiness. It is the forfeit of your engagement, I ask you to accept it as my wedding gift. You will not refuse me this, Marie? My path is very dark just now. Let this one ray of sunshine gladden it, until I am brave enough to bear more light; and believe me always your friend. FRANK FERROL."

In that moment she was nearer loving him than in all the months he had pleaded for her heart.

When Thornton came next day she put the letter in his hands. His own eyes were misty as he refolded and handed it back.

Then the joy of the present enwrapped them in its sunshine. Is it always thus? Do we purchase pleasure only at cost of pain? In the happiness for which both had waited so long, which was theirs at last in its perfect fulness, they forgot to ask or answer the grave question. After all—for them was the sunshine—the cloud was in another man's sky.

"Has it Paid."

A touching anecdote associated with the death of President Garfield is told by the Brooklyn Argus:

When Gen. Garfield's nomination was talked of, Mrs. Garfield asked Gov. Jewell if it would pay to leave the pleasant home in Mentor, and received in reply: "Yes; in a year your husband will be President of this country, and hold the highest office on this whole globe." On the funeral train Mrs. Garfield sent for Gov. Jewell, and asked him, "Governor, has it paid?" Again he replied, "Yes, for that man is the best loved man on the globe."

A Shot Not Shot.

BY JEROME BURNETT.

Many years ago the undersigned had millions of sport hunting and fishing round about the town of Terre Haute, Indiana, and while much could be written and told in reference to game killed and fish caught, much, also might be said of times when game was not killed and fish were not induced to take hold. I am inclined to think there is studious effort on the part of sportsmen who write and talk (the few who are so disposed) to mention only the brighter side of their experiences, and to ignore the incidents and trials that exasperated their souls.

Talk about songs that are never sung, of kisses that are never kissed, of immense sums of money that might have been made—they are as nothing compared to the big fish we have hooked and lost, and inopportune occurrences that have kept us from bagging magnificent game.

You probably know of the great depression of spirits that has followed the discovery that your powder-flask was lost—in the muzzle-loading days—when pigeons were coming over in myriads; you know how thoughts of immeasurable disappointment arise with the view of a man on horseback between you and a flock of wild geese to which you have been groping your way on hands and knees; you probably know how soon life becomes a burden by seeing intervening footprints in the virgin snow when you have been tracking a deer for hours, and near by hear the report of a gun; you possibly know the desolation of spirit that comes, after going ten miles to a favorite fishing-ground, to find that some "rural roosters" have just hauled a hundred yards' seine, and raked out every living thing. These are the toothaches of memory; but, thank the Lord, they are only here and there. The good times are the brightest, and grow brighter, while the misadventures and disappointments serve their purpose, perhaps to point a moral and adorn a tale, to teach us to be more careful, more observing, more drapers.

Speaking of turkeys, I was coming down to town from a friend's farm on Otter Creek, where I had spent several days hunting squirrels, and having a grand old time, for a boy with a gun. It was early morning, and I was footing it on the highway, approaching what was known as Marke's Mill.—The owner of the mill had put a fence around a dozen acres of land near the creek, where he was feeding hogs for the Terre Haute market. Nearing the enclosure, I saw six turkeys running along by the side of the fence, about sixty yards ahead of me, ducking their heads occasionally, picking up corn, and trying to find an opening to get into the field. I had never killed a wild turkey; in fact, had seen but few alive.

"What a splendid shot," I said to myself, "if they were only wild!" Raising my rifle, I took aim, and further commented on the beautiful shot I could make, thinking of the likelihood of bringing down two at one fire, and what a jolly thing it would be to take home a nice, fat wild turkey.

[illegible] I first saw them two or three hundred yards, showing some distress at my near approach, as some tame turkeys are wont to do, but evidently eager to get into the corn. Three times I raised my rifle and took good aim, wishing I could have such a shot at wild turkeys, and regretting that I had not been able to find any the two or three days before.

Finally the "gang" crossed the road within fifty yards of me, and disappeared in a strip of dense woods up the creek. Before I reached the mill a man came up to me and asked, with great seriousness:

"Why what's the matter with your gun?"

I held up my pet rifle with some show of pride and answered, "Nothing."

"Why, er—is she loaded?"

"Yes," I replied, a little piqued at the man's peculiar manner.

"O! you're not after game!" the man continued.

"Yes, I have been, but on the way down to town I don't expect to see much, a prairie chicken or two, perhaps, below here. I killed a lot of squirrels yesterday."

"Don't care much about big game?"

"Yes, sir," I said, emphasizing the latter word.

Just then two men crossed the road back where I had seen the turkeys, both armed and intent on business.

"Reckon you haven't hunted round here much—haven't practised much on turkeys and things?"

"No; squirrels have been my best holt."

"Well, that's curious; well, why didn't you give 'em a twist, anyhow?"

"Say, mister," I almost gasped, as I heard a crack of a rifle, "were those wild turkeys?"

"In course they was, and busters, too. Bill Gatrell's got one of 'em now, I reckon!"

It was no use to talk further; it was too late to repair my loss, and I trudged on home with a regret that twenty-five years have softened but little.—Forest and Stream.

To Please Young Lovers.

Two pretty novelties in finger-rings to be found at the principal jewelry stores are very popular among young people in fashionable society. One has a round setting of small stones, the other three parallel bars studded with small gems, pretty combinations being preserved, such as turquoise and pearls, diamonds and rubies, or rubies and emeralds. The feature of their construction which charms the young folks is that, by a very ingenious device, each setting conceals a delicately enameled inscription, which can be kept hidden or disclosed, as the wearer desires. By pressing an almost imperceptible point at one side under the round setting, a little plate slides out to sight with its motto, "Love Never Dies," "Remember, This True Heart," "Forever Thine," or something of that sort. And by turning the central bar in the other style three flat slides are exposed successively, each of which may bear an inscription.

Penny Postage stamps were first issued in 1840.

The Bull-Roarer.

The "bull-roarer," a toy better known to English than American boys, has just reappeared before the English public as the text of a discourse delivered recently by Mr. Tylor before the Royal Institute. Mr. Tylor is the author of various books upon primitive civilization, and is just now investigating the "bull-roarer" as one of the puzzles in human history. For it is found, always as a sacred instrument used in celebrating religious mysteries, not only in ancient Greece, but in New Zealand, New Mexico, Australia and Africa, and the question is, did it begin as a toy, and through the diabolical character of its noise come to be regarded as a suitable means of impressing such spiritual powers as could be summoned, or did it degenerate into a toy when familiarity had dulled the effect first produced by its use? Possibly the reader may recall a toy, the originator of which is unknown, a toy constructed simultaneously from Maine to Florida and from the Alleghanies to the Pacific slope by every boy, high or low, rich or poor, who could compass an empty tomato can, a string, and a bit of rosin.—Through every city and village of the land swept this epidemic of "roosters," whose voice was the voice of the guinea hen, and a rusty gate, and a contentious woman and an energetic steam whistle combined. The "bull-roarer" is of less complex but quite as sustained force, and simple and innocent in appearance far beyond the "rooster," and is capable of well-nigh as unearthly a chorus. Any bit of board will make one, and the process is described entirely in the interest of science, and with no slightest reference to the wishes or intentions of the small boy.

Take then a bit of board, say a quarter of an inch in thickness, eight inches long and three wide, and sharpen each end, leaving the rearer when finished in the shape of the "fish" used as a counter. Now tie a strong string a yard in length tightly around one end, twist the other firmly about the forefinger and whirl. Whirl patiently for nothing will happen for some time. In fact, the audience who listened to Mr. Tylor, looked with at first interest, then doubt, then derision, at the spectacle of a serious and discreet philosopher whirling this bit of wood with a calmness born of experience. What they heard was first a mild buzz, as of a blue-bottle fly on a hot day; then a lower buzz, the voice of a dozen hives of angry bees, and suddenly a roar, "a mighty rushing noise, as if some supernatural being fluttered and buzzed his wings with fearful roar." This is the "bull-roarer," and in every country save England it is still regarded as possessing magical power, having so much virtue as a certain means of raising the wind, that its immediate adoption is suggested to the large constituency who are still waiting for something to turn up.

Melville's Wife's Mementoes.

Mrs. Melville has preserved a number of mementoes of her husband's last hours at home previous to his departure on that terrible Arctic voyage, from which it was doubtful if he would ever return. "Here," said the fond wife, holding in her hands a lined napkin folded and held by a silver ring, at which she gazed long and pensively, "is his napkin, just as he left it after the last meal at which any of us have ever seen him. The last thing he did before leaving the table was to fold the napkin, and, laying it down by his plate, he said: 'Perhaps I will never fold another at home.' Then he got up, bade us all follow him, and went down to the little depot you see out there, said 'Good-bye,' and we have never seen him since. Elsie, here, who is growing up to be quite a big girl, was then not as large as Neta, there, who was but a baby. I tell you, when George gets back I am afraid that he won't be able to recognize us all. I expect that Lieut. Danenhower has some papers for me, although as yet he has not notified us. He can anyway, tell us all about George." A little rubber band, which was hanging on the clock in the dining-room, at this moment caught Mrs. Melville's eyes, and she stopped abruptly to point it out as another memento. It was placed there by her husband the last evening he spent at home, and a cap which he had hung upon a picture-frame the afternoon before his departure remains exactly where he left it. Although anxious to see her husband, Mrs. Melville says that she can afford to wait until he either finds Lieut. Chipp and his crew and restores them in good health to their families or discovers that they have been lost. "It is his duty," said she, "and George always does that."—Philadelphia Record.

Mr. Tennyson and the Composer.

When a celebrated composer of ballad music had set the "May Queen" to music there visited him one evening a graceful gentleman in a camlet cloak, who asked the composer to sing the song. The musician explained that for some reason he could not do so, and then the stranger said:

"But I am Alfred Tennyson, and I thought that since you wrote the music and I wrote the words you might sing it for me."

"But, Mr. Tennyson, I cannot, for you know I am under engagement to ——."

"Yes, I know, but since you wrote the music and I wrote the words, I should think you might sing it for me."

Finally the singer could refuse no longer, and as he sang he heard sobs behind him. When he had finished the stranger said, in a voice choked with tears:

"Ah, I never knew before that I could write so beautifully."

He clasped the singer's hand, and in a moment was gone.

She Made No Answer.

"How dare you speak to me, sir?" she demands, in apparent anger.

"I beg you not to be offended. I could not resist offering you a simple courtesy," he replies, adding, as her anger simpers away, "you look so exactly like my mother."

Somehow she scuds along alone with a look that would have taken the glazing off a stone jar.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return after once taking it, and those who have used it have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

The elegant new depot building of the Flint & Pere Marquette railroad at East Saginaw is now open for business. It is one of the finest in the state.

Beware of Them.

A good article that has achieved success, and attained a world-wide reputation by its true merits and wonderful results, is always imitated. Such is the case with Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Already unprincipled parties are endeavoring to delude an unsuspecting public by offering imitations of this most fortunate discovery. Do not be deceived, but insist on having the true remedy, and take no other. For sale by all reliable druggists everywhere.

Important to Travelers.

Special Inducements are offered you by the BURLINGTON ROUTE. It will pay you to read their advertisement to be found elsewhere in this issue.

A Difficult Problem Solved.

The desire for stimulants is becoming a monstrous evil and how to overcome it is a serious question with reformers. Parker's Ginger Tonic fairly solves the difficult problem.
